HAWAII'S PARK OF VOLCANOES
Central and Most Unique National Reservation in the Whole World.

Unhappily among the natural wonders of the world will be the proposed new National Park of Volcanoes on the Island of Hawaii. It will be the first park of volcanoes ever established by any nation in the world, and it is in line with the plan of the United States to make the national parks of America and its territories the greatest and most picturesque of the kind in the world. The new park of volcanoes on Hawaii is unusual and of peculiar interest to the American people because it is the only territory under American control with the exception of the Philippines, in which there are volcanoes in action.

Hawaii is today the world's youngest land, with a geological history of a few hundred thousand years at most. There are great valleys, high precipices, snow-capped mountains and around whose sides are numerous openings from which flows are issued in the past. The lava from the upper craters. In centuries past since the great mountains were uplifted, filled in the valley between the two cones, until now Kilauea is poised on the flank of the higher mountain.

Can you imagine standing on the brink of a precipice 600 feet high, which dizzy cliff forms a portion of the wall of a great pit, the opposite side of which rises indistinctly three or four miles in front of you, the great floor below you spreading out like the troubled surface of some black sea unrelieved by foliage or lighter color? If you can you have some idea of the wonderful magnificence of the crater of Kilauea. But this black lava floor has been cold and solid for many years, and if it is not until you traverse this wonderful sea, the waves of which are frozen into ten thousand fantastic shapes, that you come to the wonder of wonders—Halemauoa. Pen or brush nor camera can convey any adequate idea of this valley of fire 200-300 feet within a pit—with its lake of molten lava surging and roaring in awful and terrific grandeur.

During the summer of 1909 a road, seven miles in length from the volcano house, was completed right into the crater of Kilauea, by which one may now ride in an automobile to within a few yards of the inner fire pit. On the edge of the crater stands the Kilauea house, a modern hotel.

More inaccessible, but of much interest, is the mountain Mauna Loa, with its great lava flows and its intermittently active crater. The snows are frequent at the extreme summit, from which one may look across the crest of Mauna Kea, 20 feet higher up, and if he would may follow another trail to that eminence.

Secondary only to these living wonders is the extinct crater of Haleakala, at the top of a mountain of the same name, a cone whose great bulk comprises the eastern half of the island of Maui. Haleakala (the House of the Sun) is the largest known extinct crater in the world, with a width of more than seven miles and a circumference of something like twenty miles. At its highest point the rim of this vast bowl is 10,000 feet, while the bed is at least 2,500 feet below. A score of cones from 300 to 1,000 feet in height dot the floor, while from the one-time children lead two gaps, in their time the vents of lava flows which covered the eastern and southern flanks of the mountain.—Philadelphia Record.

OPEN PRICES FOR FAKE RUGS
Fabulous Prices Paid for Imported—Cheap Home-Made Articles.

Now that the oriental rug season is in full swing and everybody is trying to get an original "prayer rug" fresh from Mecca, authenticated facts are in great demand. A special article on the subject appears in "The Upholsterer," particularly concerning the indispensable features of the business known as "The Fake Rug Auction Sale."

"Any well-gouted man who attends an auction sale of oriental rugs," says the writer, "is simply staggered by the extravagance of misrepresentations. We do not refer to the Philadelphia Moquette couch cover, worth $7.00 at wholesale, and offered as a genuine Persian rug at fabulous prices, but for the ordinary trade sale. In a recent catalogue issued by a downtown firm seventeen names appear that no legitimate rug dealer ever heard of, all listed as representing various types of rugs, named from some of the hundreds of rivers, mountains and villages within 1,500 miles of Constantinople."

According to experts, all that a fake rug dealer needs is an oriental map and a pile of American fake antique rugs, which he names after the historical nomenclature of the orient. It is a common thing at these sales, we are told, to "catalogue" the articles as "Royal" or "Palace" rugs, especially the cheaper grade. The man who pays a fancy price for a "Kirmanshah" little dreams that it was manufactured in the oriental districts of Yonkers, the Bronx, Philadelphia or Jersey City.

There has not been a Sarak rug made in centuries, yet the term is tacked to a Ribet because it is like a Sarak, we are informed. A "genuine Iran rug" means nothing except to the inexperienced rug buyer. The auctioneer talks glibly about the genuine "Terch" and the well-authenticated "Ayn." He lays stress on the "Herat" and challenges contradiction, saying that he will refund the money if it is not genuine.

But the auctioneer fails to say that the linen rug is the cheapest grade made in the world no more than that his guarantee is worth no more than if he guaranteed a blanket as made of pure shoddy. So-called Mecca rugs are offered by thousands, and the more ragged and dirty and dilapidated they are the more bidders are impressed with the idea they are genuine because long in the service of the Mecca pilgrims.

As He Understood It.

The lofty browed, scholarly man who was officiating as toastmaster at the banquet turned to the man sitting next to him.

"What is the next thing in the order of exercises?" he asked.

"The other made a whispered response. 'Please say that again; I didn't quite catch it.'"

"The answer was repeated.

"'Gentlemen,' said the toastmaster, 'the next thing will be an address by that prince of entertainers of the 'Isis, entitled, 'The Genie'."

"Seen Kell Lee?"
