

For the WOMEN FOLK

K. K. G. Wins

Although she turned a deaf ear to the entreaties of several different societies during the fall rushing season, stoutly maintaining her intention to remain an "independent" during her first year in the University of Michigan, Miss Helen King of Omaha has finally yielded to the urgings of the Kappa Kappa Gamma society and has donned their pledge pin. Miss King has remained true to her original decision, however, and will not be initiated into the sorority until the coming fall.

Entering the University of Michigan after a brilliant high school career, Miss King was much sought after by the different societies, but refused all invitations to ally herself with any of them, partly because of parental objections, partly because of an excess of college work and partly because it was her conviction that she should see life from the outside before joining a sorority. The Omaha young woman will spend four more years at the university.

O. H. S. Activities

Editing a full fledged thirty-two page magazine is the all important subject of interest among several of the girls at present, and the youthful news writers have been keeping the school astir there among with their efforts for social "copy" and news of interest for the annual girl's number of the Register, which will be issued the latter part of this month. There will be several original and novel features in this number, together with the usual department devoted to the different school activities. The boys will not be allowed to submit any copy, and will be assisted in gathering advertisements.

An open program meeting to which members of all the clubs and societies of the school will be invited, will be given in the Young Men's Christian association under the auspices of the Athenian Debating society, Friday evening, March 15. J. L. Kennedy will be the principal speaker of the occasion and the rest of the program will be composed of recitations and musical numbers by students.

Miss Ruth Koch, '12, has been appointed poster artist of the Margaret Fuller society, and her "February Indian Girl" and "A March Scene" have been placed on exhibition in the main hall, where they have attracted considerable interest among the students and the faculty.

Malcolm Baldrige, '12, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard H. Baldrige, who has been seriously ill at the Wise Memorial hospital, with appendicitis, has been the recipient of several handsome bouquets of flowers from students and clubs at the school this week. The Cadet Officers' club remembered him by sending a huge bouquet of carnations.

WHEN THE TRAIN COMES IN

All Shades of Human Life, in the Moving Picture of Railroad Station.

A busy railroad station is a grand child's picture book for him who observes it. All the child has to do is to look; the leaves are turned before him. There, in all the colors of the rainbow, are countless pictures to cram himself with. And what is a rather curious fact is, that a railroad station may freely be classed among humorous picture books. Other picture books, such as church, theater, roadway, Fifth avenue, political meeting, ball game, etc., have, of course, many funny pictures. But whether it is that almost all absurd people constantly travel, and those with no touch of the comedy do but seldom, or whether, as here, nothing else goes forward seriously to occupy the attention, one's mind is left more free to be struck by the ridiculousness of all mankind, so it is that perhaps as humorous a place as one may find is a busy railroad station. And one must be very biased who no longer feels an enjoyable stimulation at the approach of an expected train at the station.

The psychology of the arrival of a railroad train at the station belongs to the proper study of mankind, and could be made into an interesting little monograph. As the train becomes due one feels but half a mind on the conversation, supposing one to be conversing; the other half is waiting for the train. One has, too, a feeling, faint at first, looming stronger within one, against continuing to sit quietly inside (supposing one to have gone within), where one is. An impelling to go see if the train is not coming number one's brain. A like contagious restlessness breathes through the waiting crowd. People begin to stand up by their grips. Some go without on the search. They can be seen through the doors and windows, padding the platform; they return, some of them, and one scans their expressions eagerly—they are discouragingly blank. After a bit they go out again, or others do, and return as before; wholly unlifted nay, one can see, for any concentration of thought.

The train is late. There is an alarm or two. At last an unmistakable elasticity impresses the place. A distant whistle is heard; it stirs one like the tap of a drum. The train is coming! One's pulse beats high as one moves into the press toward the doorway. The whistle is heard much nearer. Then again and again! Then with a whirr that turns one a somersault inside, a long, dark, heavy mass rushes across the light before him. When one comes again on one's feet, speaking figuratively, the train is standing there, and one hurries aboard to get a seat. But, flog, one is stopped until arriving passengers get off.—New York Post.

LINCOLN HELPED THEM OUT

Great Man Allowed Youthful Elopers to Be Married in White House.

The following story of Lincoln is recalled by A. M. Elliott of Brooklyn: While Lincoln was president a country boy and girl eloped from Virginia to Washington. A United States senator met them on Pennsylvania avenue, noting that they evidently were seeking some address, asked if he could assist them. They told him that they had run away from home—that they were seeking a minister. The senator took them to the White House and requested to see the president, who, with his family, was just finishing the evening meal. The young couple's plight was made known to him, and with that great kindness so characteristic of this great man, Lincoln sent for a minister, and in the East room of the White House, with the president and his family and the senator in attendance, were married this simple country couple. During McKinley's term a Mrs. Chandler of Anderson, Ind., applied for a widow's pension. As is required by the Pension department she made affidavit as to where and when her marriage occurred and stated the facts given here. Mrs. Chandler was the bride to whom Lincoln was so kind. The pension was granted her, and it still lives, and a
