

D. A. R. Delegates from Nebraska

WHEN the Daughters of the American Revolution from all over the country assemble in Washington, D. C., next month to hold their twenty-first annual congress, a distinguished delegation from Omaha will take part in the sessions.

Mrs. A. K. Gault, who has been national vice president general for Nebraska for the last two years, will be re-nominated by the state chapter and will no doubt hold this office for the coming two years. Mrs. Gault is on a number of national committees. She is chairman of the souvenir committee and is a member of both the Continental Hall committee, of which Mrs. Matthew T. Scott, president general, is chairman, and the conservation committee, of which Mrs. James Finchot, mother of Gifford Finchot, is chairman. Mrs. Gault holds her membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution through her ancestor, Ezra Cleveland, who was a lieutenant during the revolution. She also belongs to the Society of Daughters of Colonial Governors, being a descendant of Governor Mayhew, who headed the colony on Martha's Vineyard island before the war.

Mrs. J. J. Stubbs, regent of the Omaha chapter, is a delegate ex-officio to the convention. Her membership as a "daughter" she holds through Micajah How, who was a judge in Trenton, N. J., during the revolution. Mrs. Stubbs comes from a long line of patriotic Americans and from their deeds holds membership in many organizations besides the Daughters of the American Revolution, the National Society of Colonial Dames, National Society of Daughters of Founders and Patriots, Colonial Daughters of the Seventeenth Century and Daughters of 1812. Mrs. Stubbs is state registrar of both the Daughters of the American Revolution and the colonial Dames of Nebraska.

The other delegate from the Omaha chapter is Mrs. A. L. Fernald, its secretary. She has the distinction of having descended, on her mother's side of the family, from John and Priscilla Alden. From the deeds of her forefathers, William Pendleton, who was made colonel during the French and Indian wars and who was president of the town council of Westerly, R. I., from 1762 to 1781, she is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The fourth member of the Omaha delegation is Mrs. W. A. Dillworth, who will represent the Major Isaac Sadler chapter. The patriotic participation in the war of her forefather, Captain Zachariah Harwood of Bennington, Vt., makes her a "daughter." Her grandfather, Nathan S. Harwood, took active part in the war of 1812 and for this reason she belongs to the Nebraska Society of the Daughters of 1812. Her mother, Mrs. M. A. Morton, who lives with her, is a "real" daughter and her daughter, Mrs. Elmer Conley is also a Daughter of 1812.

The Omaha delegation, except Mrs. Gault, who goes early to attend a national board meeting, will leave for Washington April 12, to be there for the opening session, April 15. The convention will last through the week and will be held in Continental Hall. The Omaha women will be together at the New Willard hotel.

Evening Gowns Are Elaborate in the Latest Messalines

There are many white serges and whippings as well as colored fabrics and poplins, foulards and taffetas in the one-piece dresses for everyday wear this spring shown in Omaha stores. For later in the season the white corded linen dresses are in vogue. For afternoon and evening wear there is an attractive display of lingerie dresses and the showier and more elaborate chiffons and messalines.

Something new in street dresses is the coat dress which is supposed to take the place of a suit. One of these is of blue and brown changeable silk fastening down the front. Almost covering the waist is a broad fascia of white dotted with blue and bordered with a fringe of lace fastened at one-inch intervals with small brown velvet buttons. The deep cuff of the three-fourths sleeves corresponds with the fascia. The skirt has a tunic drape edged with narrow platings of the silk.

The one-piece day-time dresses are built on long, straight lines with rather high waist line, Dutch neck and three-fourths sleeves. Embroidery, buttons, piping and lace form the trimming. The collar and cuffs contrast with the dress. On many of the new dresses a coat effect is simulated either with lace or piping. On some there is a short apron effect or peplum.

One of the daintiest and most elaborate of lingerie gowns is hand embroidered in an elaborate design of daisies. The skirt is draped over rows of fitted narrow shadow lace and rises at the sides. It has a deep border of embroidery and is edged with crochet balls. Vertical rows of shadow lace contrast with the embroidery design on the waist and on the short sleeves. This gown has the short apron effect in embroidery and lace down the front.

A white crepe gown is trimmed with embroidery in a grape design and cluny lace and has a bit of color in a violet colored velvet girdle and three small flat velvet bows on the front of the waist.

The embroidered skirt has a twelve-inch wide band of lace around the bottom and this is edged with a narrower band of the embroidery, at the edge of which is a silk fringe. The waist is made with high neck and three-fourths sleeves which are elaborately embroidered and trimmed with lace. Running from waist line half way up the waist and narrowing as they go, are embroidery points edged with double frills of net.

The showier evening gowns are very ornate with draperies, scarfs, beads and fringes and many varieties of lace. A vivid gown shown by Orkin Bros. is of American Beauty messaline and heavy Paris shade lace. The bodice, which is square in front and V-shaped in back, is of draped American Beauty, chiffon, reaching almost to the knees in front and to the very edge of the train in back extends the lace. In the front of the waist is a large oriental buckle from which drapes of the messaline extend down each side and across the back of the skirt covering the lace.
