DES MOINES RIVER IS OPEN

One Lonely Freighter Will Make Trip and Then Quit.

LAST EFFORT AT NAVIGATION

Quiet on Attempt to Revive Boating—Federal Officials Find Chinaman Unlawfully in the Country.

DES MOINES, April 5.—(Special Telegram.)—There is to be an opening of the "navigation season" in Des Moines on Monday and the one solitary steamboat that thus far represents the fleet of freighters for the river is to make a journey down the river as far as at least as the city limits. A boat was built about three years ago, but the water was never high enough to float the craft until recently. Then it got so high the "captain" was afraid to trust the craft out of reach of the banks. Now he has planned to start things. It is the only effort made to revive boating on the river, and since the turning down of the scheme by engineers it probably will be the last.

Find Smuggled Chinaman. After several weeks' investigation federal officials today discovered that a Chinaman who has been held in the county jail on a charge of vagrancy, secured entrance to the United States unlawfully. The Chinaman gave his name as John Hounk, and has been taken in charge by S. L. Whitefield, immigration inspector of St. Louis.

The prisoner was arrested several weeks ago by police officers, who turned him over to the district court on a charge of vagrancy. Judge Brannan took charge of the man and tried to learn something of his past life, but he refused to talk with his countrymen who lived in Des Moines. He was then turned over to the federal authorities for investigation.

Des Moines Gets 90-Cent Gas. Des Moines will get 90 cent gas after a battle of nearly a year. Judge Sloan, who was appointed master to take the evidence in the case, today reported to Judge McPherson in favor of the ordinance reducing the gas rate from a $1 to 90 cents. The case had been in court for over a year. It is now up to Judge McPherson to approve the findings, and the gas rate will come down.

SMALL CHILD FALLS DOWN FURNACE PIPE

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., April 5.—(Special.)—For a child to tumble down a furnace pipe is a new episode in child life, but is what occurred in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Vostburg of Gimran. Eighteen-months old Evert Vostburg, while exploring the house, removed a register covering a large cold air pipe leading to the furnace and then tumbled into the round duct tunnel that sloped into the furnace. Mrs. Vostburg heard the child crying, but could not locate its voice, until she happened to find the cold air register out of place. Help was summoned and James Stewart, a carpenter who was working on the place, went down the pipe head first, while the parents of the child held him by each ankle. Stewart was able to stretch far enough to get hold of the baby's garments and drag it out of its uncomfortable place. But for the fact that the fire in the furnace was low the child would probably have been pretty well roasted before it was rescued.

EVIL PROPHECY KNOCKED OUT

Indian Fortune Teller's Prediction Crowds the Edge of Reality.

When the British steamship Hylas, now at the Bush terminal, South Brooklyn, was in Calcutta last December being loaded with East Indian merchandise for New York, a fortune teller went aboard and tried to induce the ship's officers to let him foretell their future. He was greeted with derision by all except J. Puxley, chief officer, who told the soothsayer he would listen to the predictions. The fortune teller lost his popularity with Puxley when he prophesied the ship would go to the bottom with all on board. The man said very bad weather would hit the vessel, and he even went so far as to advise Puxley not to make the voyage. When Puxley's brother officers heard what was to happen they drove the seer from the ship.

Not until the Hylas entered the Mediterranean did the evil prophecy recur to the ship's officers. The vessel scarcely had cleared the Suez canal when unusually severe weather set in. It lasted several days, and the longer it continued the more uneasy became those who knew what had been said by the fortune teller. The ship labored heavily, but reached the Straits of Gibraltar safely.

On January 12, when in mid-Atlantic, another storm arose that lasted for seven days. The wind blew with great force, and huge seas swept the vessel. Again the fortune teller's prediction loomed up. At times the Hylas was buried by enormous waves, and the damage that was being done by tons of water that washed aboard worried Huxley and the other officers. All who knew of the forecast of the vessel's doom began to be alarmed.

"The only thing saved us," said Puxley, "this ship had flush decks. As the water came aboard it ran off quickly. Had there been a high rail to stop it the fortune teller's prediction would have come true. We don't deny we were in a pretty bad way for a week, and every time the ship took a big sea we wondered how much longer we could last."

Extensive damage was done to the vessel, and three sailors were injured. The cabin of the chief engineer was smashed in, the bridge railing was swept away, and doors of all the officers' cabins amidships were broken.

Daring work by Robert Flood, chief engineer; James Daley, third engineer, and the ship's carpenter saved the ship from foundering. In the height of the storm they lashed themselves together and placed an iron door against the chief engineer's cabin, where tons of water were pouring in. It was feared the force of the water would break the cabin bulkhead and wash away the superstructure. Had the bulkhead gone the danger would have been great. Puxley saved a sailor from being washed overboard. The man was at work on the forecastle when the ship dipped suddenly, and a big wave buried the forward part of the ship. The chief officer caught the sailor as he was carried past him, at the same time holding on for his life to a stanchion.—New York Press.

LATEST STYLE IN STREET CAR

Hobble Skirt Banishes Steps and the Straps Give Way to Supporting Poles.

The stepless street car, invented by Frank Hedley, vice president and general manager, and J. S. Davis, superintendent of car equipment of the New York Railway company, the new name for the old Metropolitan Street Railway company, was run out of the car barn at Ninety-ninth street and Lexington avenue for its first try-out by the company's officers and members of the Federation of Women's clubs.

The floor of the car is only ten inches above the street pavement, which does away with the necessity for a step. One steps directly from the street to the floor of the car. There are no end entrances, entrance and egress being

UNPAID CARPENTERS STRIKE

Rasmussen's Men at Court House Lay Aside Their Tools.

ZIEGLER EXPLAINS THE CAUSE

Workmen Have Not Been Paid for Month, Though Subcontractor Has Received All Money Due Him on Estimates.

The twelve carpenters employed on the construction of the Douglas county court house quit work yesterday as the result of financial differences between subcontractor Rasmussen, who is doing the carpentry work, and the general contractors, Caldwell and Drake. Superintendent Ziegler, employed by Caldwell and Drake, is now endeavoring to get the men back on the job. He explains that Rasmussen has not paid his workmen for thirty days, and that they are dissatisfied.

"This has occurred several times with Rasmussen and his men," says Mr. Ziegler, "and it always reflects on Caldwell and Drake. Rasmussen has been paid everything that is coming to him, deducting 15 per cent which is to be held back until the job is completed, and he seems to think that Caldwell & Drake should dig down for money to keep the carpenters going."

Chief Clerk John W. Murphy of Caldwell & Drake said the trouble is solely between Rasmussen and his men.

"We have paid Rasmussen all he has coming to him up to date," said Murphy. "If he hasn't got enough work out of his men so that what we paid him will cover their wages it is his fault and not ours. If work is not resumed within a reasonable time we will declare his contract forfeited and proceed with the work ourselves."

PIG GETS AWAY WITH MONK

Mrs. Gregory Lincoln of Marysville, O., is prostrated with grief because a pig devoured her inseparable companion, Jocko, a monkey, 5-year-old. Physicians say that Mrs. Lincoln may recover, but will never be the same woman as a result of the shock.

Mrs. Lincoln declares that her pet met his death as the result of jealousy on the part of Pigaway, a forty-pound porker. She says that Pigaway always was jealous of Jocko, and was always waiting for a chance to eat him up.

The chance came, she says, when Pigaway deliberately concealed himself under her bed, and as she fell into a dose stealthily crept upon the bed, where she held Jocko in her arms, and ate the pet in two gulps and then jumped to the floor, snorting over his victory.

Mrs. Lincoln awoke just in time to hear a faint squeal from Jocko as he was disappearing down the pig's throat. "Jocko loved to sit beside me and hear me read poems and to have me caress him," said the disconsolate woman.

Pigaway, on the other hand, she says, has not the remotest conception of refinement. All he knows is jealousy. He often crept into the house and made murderous assaults on poor little Jocko. Mrs. Lincoln added, she has ordered that Pigaway immediately be killed for the "diabolical deed."—Ohio State Journal.
