Desperate Desmond

Villain, Hero, Rosamond and All Hands Join in a Glad Easter Parade.

By Hershfield

Casting Aside All Thoughts of Villainy, Let Your Eye Rest Upon This Pleasing Picture of a Happy Well-Dressed Easter Parade in the Great Russian Capital.

Desmond, the villalnous scoundrel, who has made life a burden for Claude and Resemond, is now in the hands of our hero. But Claude, ever merciful, agrees to postnone the villain's execution until after the great Easter parade down the Nevsky Prospect in St. Petersburg.

There is plenty of money in the Russian capital, although only a few of the Russlans get their hands on any of it, and the royal family is liberal in spending money-why not, since they get it with-out working for it and can always draw on the public exchequer for their wants?

For once we will give precedence to an outsider over Desmond, Claude and Rosamond. As we are in St. Petersburg. we will give the caur the first press notice. Notice him in the center of the picture above. He is togged out in a new crown

Notice also the czarina and the czar's little boy, who goes along rejuctantly. Poor child, he has nothing to look forhave bombs chucked at him. However, there is no way out of it, unless Russia

Notice also in the parade the Nihilists with their Easter millinery, and Mordkia-the famous Russian dancer. Also the grand duke, who is speculating on the best way of making a touch from the czar. Gay dogs those grand dukes are,

Ah, and now we see Rosamond in a uperb Easter hat and a panier skirt. Isn't she the star of the parade? Claude thinks so, any way, and that is enough for her. You also see Claude and Desmond. Then, the parade over, hostilities
