Desperate Desmond

Claude Eclaire Escapes the Russian Secret Police, but Falls Into Even Worse Hands.

By Hershfield

I.—THE BROKEN TOOTH.

Observe in the first picture above, what looks like a caviar sandwich. You may remember, however, that the sandwich was made of shot prepared by Desmond, Claude's enemy, so that when our hungry hero took a bite he chipped one of his best teeth. Claude now has a double reason for desiring to escape—fear of the police and desire of a dentist.

II.—IN THE DENTIST'S ROOM.

Desmond, whose heartless scheme resulted in the damage to one of Claude's teeth, is shrewd enough to guess that if our hero succeeds in breaking out of the prison he will rush to the nearest dentist's. So Desmond hurries there first and takes possession of the place to await the coming of the man he hates. Rosamond is forced to attend the villain.

III.—THE SHUT-EYE SENTRY.

In the meantime Claude has gained access to the prison yard and has so far escaped the notice of the sentry who is always on guard there. However, in the bright sunlight there seems to be little chance of eluding the watchers much longer, and our hero is as far from freedom as when cooped up in the dismal cell into which he was thrust.

IV.—IN THE SHADOW.

As the sentry begins his walk to the gate Claude gets a great idea. Lying on the ground, he rolls along at the same rate as the sentry's march, and thus keeps hidden from whatever other eyes might be searching the prison year. It is a risky plan, but our hero must at all cost have his precious tooth attended to before it breaks off.

V.—THE ESCAPE.

As the sentry trums to retrace his steps Claude quickly rolls through the gates and is free. Free as the bounding deep or the bounding gazelle, or any other bounder. Free as air, free as New Jersey is free from Governor Wilson, free as a mosquito is free from scruples. It is a glorious feeling, especially when one wants to have a tooth fixed.

VI.—THE FAKE DENTIST.

"I'm the boyski!" cries Desperate Desmond, "and I'll make Claudeski howl!" The scoundrel, posing as a dentist, has the unsuspecting hero in the chair before him, quite at his mercy. Rosamond, bound and gagged, cannot aid her lover, no matter how he is tortured. Full details will be given in tomorrow's pictures.
