egan to rain. And soon the hall came After the first few small traces there was a sudden and fearful bombardment of the car and the windows on the north of the car and the windows on the north side. Smash they went, one after the other. The passengers got out of the way of the showers of broken glass as best they could. All edged to the other side of the coach. By this time the train was slowing down rapidly, Just as it came to a stop we felt ourselves lifted. We were nomentarily let down again. Immediately, however, we felt the car cover. But it was the atrangest thing go over. But it was the strangest thing you ever heard of. It was just like roll-ing over, just because the people were all standing or sitting just as close to the south side of the train as possible. the south side of the train as possible. It was dark now. The storm lasted about fifteen minutes; honestly, it seemed to be pretty nearly fifteen hours. When it yet up we got out, helped the women out and most of the latter were taken to the farm house of Mr. Trimble until the engineer brought two cars from Ort to take the passengers to the end of the trip. Those farmer people in the vicinity came over and did everything they could, brining towels, water and restoratives, and were very kind to the passengers."

WOODPECKERS' LEGAL RIGHTS

New York Juriet Waves the Ban of Liberty for the Feathered Tribe.

The summer home of William B. Lawrence, a broker at B Broad street, which adjoins the estate of Algernon S. Bohaeffer, a banker, in North Broadway, Yonkers, N. T., is closed, and Mrs. Lawrence is at her city home, 26 West Fiftyseventh street, all on account of a woodpecker. The woodpecker inhabits a dead tree on the edge of the Schaeffer estate, just where it adjoins that of the Lawrences.

It has lived there for a year and a half, and every morning at 4 o'clock it begins its task of the day. The noise of its pecking has awakened Mrs. Lawrence, and her neighbors as well, on many mornings, and recently she appealed to stopped.

Mr. Schaeffer replied that as pecking

Mr. Schaeffer replied that as pecking was a woodpecker's chief employment, he certainly would have no hand in such restraint of trade. Mrs. Lawrence explained that she could not sleep and sugested that the bird could be killed, quickly and with triffing pain. Mr. Schaeffer said he would protect the woodpecker in its pecking with his life. Mrs. Lawrence appealed to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animala. Mr. Ellis has written a splendid novel. Fran is a girl who deserves our most cordial approval. -Phile. Record

A New Novel by John Breckenridge Ellis

Along with the force that subdates, looking out of Fran's big black eyes is the force that inevitably attracts.

The direct, confidencial style fairly matches Fran's bold spirit and leads added interest to her showed divinations of human nature.

This story reads from beginning to end with a directness which is charming even to the three reviewer of many modern novels.
