

1-IN THE TRAP.

The audience having left the theater, Claude gets Resamend to come on the stage. Our here has the villain safely trapped below the stage and he knows that with Rosamond's weight on the trap Desmond will be unable to force the way out before the police return. Rosamond bravely volunteers to do her share in holding the scoundrel.

Below the stage the villain seeks for some means of escape. He notices a small door opening into the pit which the musicians occupy, and sees that by stretching out his arm he can reach the drum left by one of the orchestra. As the theater is empty no assistance can be mmoned, but Desmond will try it.

Grasping the drumstick the imprisoned acoundrel gives the drum a tremend bang, enough to call out the fire department, the police and the military as well. Desmond, having in mind the character of the play he had witnessed has a shrewd suspicion that help may be closer at hand than Claude imagines.

IV .- "LET ME SLEEP."

The sudden banging of the drum has had a strange effect. Out in the middle of the house has arisen a sleepy-eyed Russian. The play, "Ten Nights in a Vodka Room," combined with inferior acting, had put the man soundly to sleep, and he now grumbles loudly that he has been awakened from a refreshing slumber by the careless orchestra.

To Resamond's great surprise she sees a fierce-looking Russian rising from the supposedly empty seats. At the sight of his new danger she forgets all about the trap door which is imprisoning Desmond, and rushes up the stage to avoid the angry theater-goer. Her terror is justified by the Russian's ferocious appearance. VL-THE ESCAPE

"I'm the boyski," cries Desperate Desmond, "and I'm on the jobski again! The villain loses not a fhoment in pushing up the trap door and to his great gratificattion he sees that Claude has not returned with the police and that Rosamond is alone upon the stage. Can Claude get back in time? We can't tell until tomorrow.
