

Desperate Desmond

The Villain Takes Advantage of the Hero's Tender Heart to Swat Him on the Head

By Hershfield

I—IN THE NAVY YARD.
Desperate Desmond, the great international crook, having escaped death under the Russian battle-ship, is now in the power of Claude Desaire. Our hero is harrying the villain out of the Russian navy yard, then to the deal with the scoundrel as his black career deserves. Even now Desmond protests his defiance of Claude and the police.

II—THE DESERTER.
One of the sailors of the Russian fleet, tired of the tyranny of the officers, decides to desert and see what he can do ashore. As he stealthily sneaks out of the ship to the wharf he spies Claude Desaire with his prisoner, Desperate Desmond. At once the deserter sees that an advantage he would gain if he could get civilian clothes.

III—HELD UP.
Suddenly springing out upon the party the deserter seizes Desmond, while Claude and Rosamond take the opportunity to flee from the half-crazed sailor. The villain's suit of evening clothes has attracted the sailor, for he believes that in such a rig he would never be challenged by the sentries who guard the dockyard gates.

IV—THE WOUNDED VETERAN.
Neither Claude nor Rosamond could ever resist the appeal of the less fortunate. So when Claude sees what appears to be a gallant veteran of the late war, he quietly pulls out a copecck to place in the Russian soldier's tin cup. Little does our hero guess that this act of kindness is about to cost him his liberty.

V—THE FALLING COIN.
As Claude drops the coin in the cup of the veteran—who is, indeed, our old acquaintance, Desmond—he does not notice that the bottom of the cup has been carefully knocked out. So the coin falls to the sidewalk, and the ever-patient Claude promptly stoops to pick it up so as to save the old man. Truly the bravest are the tenderest.

VI—OVERCOME.
"I'm the boy-ski!" cried Desperate Desmond, "and you take that!" The scoundrel, as Claude stoops to pick up the coin, strikes our hero upon the head with his heavy tin cup, effectually putting him out of business. Once again Claude is a captive in his enemy's hands. Tomorrow we shall see his fate.
