STROUD SUBS THE WATER CO.

Asks $98,000 Damages for the Destruction of His Big Plant.

SAYS WATER PRESSURE WEAK

Attorney Baldrige Says He Has Twenty Witnesses Who Will Testify that Water Supply Was Insufficient.

Destruction of the vehicle and implement factory of Thomas F. Stroud by fire on April 5 is held at the door of the Omaha Water company on the ground that it failed to comply with the terms of its contract with the city regarding water pressure. Stroud has started suit against the company for $98,000, the full amount of his loss, in district court. It is alleged that the water pressure when the plant was destroyed was so weak that the fire department was unable successfully to cope with the flames. H. H. Baldrige, attorney for Stroud, said he has twenty witnesses by whom he will prove the water pressure was insufficient. The petition sets out that under a city ordinance passed in 1909 the water company ever since then has been required to maintain a reservoir with a capacity of 3,000,000 gallons and to maintain a water pressure sufficient to meet certain tests, the principal test being for eight streams of water 1 1/2 feet high through two-inch pipes at Fourteenth and Warren streets. It is alleged that these requirements were violated and that the pressure was far from sufficient to meet these tests. Several witnesses, Mr. Baldrige asserts, will testify that when the Stroud plant burned one section of hose was set on fire and it will be argued that this proves pressure was weak. Other witnesses, says the attorney, will testify the firemen were unable to send streams above the second story. The case will be fought through the supreme court by both sides. If Stroud wins a precedent will be established upon which other parties who have suffered losses may recover.

New Books

THE HOOSIER CHRONICLE. By Merrill Nicholson. 96 Pp. H.E. Houghton-Mifflin Company.

To translate current life, the ordinary life of every day, into fiction and make it seem worth while, and make it seem to even ring true, is one of the most difficult of novel-writing tasks. Mr. Nicholson in this story gives a painstaking transcript of a section of life in Indiana of today, wherein a goodly number of men and women engage in the usual occupations of a busy community. One of his chief characters is a boss who is adept at both the machine and hand-made varieties of politics, and another is a young man who first falls under the boss's influence and afterward, of course, under a young woman's inspiration, discovers that he has higher ideals. The girl's name is Sylvia, and "Who is Sylvia?" is the mystery that is supposed to furnish the necessary tang of romantic interest.

THE WOMAN FROM WOLVERTON. By Isabel Gordon Curtis. 32 Pp. H.E. The Century Company.

Home and apartment hunting, social climbing, feminine jealousies, servant problems and other commonplace details, narrated in a thoroughly unaffected and sometimes semi-humorous manner, make up this autobiography of a congresswoman's wife.

TALE OF THE TOWN. By Mrs. John Lane. 32 Pp. H.E. John Lane Company.

The quality of this book is essentially English. The "talk," however, is not confined to fashions and people, nor yet to art auctions, curio dealers, or those Strand shops where furniture and family jewels part company. Many of these things are interpreted by Mrs. Lane in transit and quite properly appreciated. She follows Americans about Europe and suffers from canal riding in the Garden of Allah. The range of her expeditions is vast, their nature varied and exciting.

A CAPTAIN UNAFRAID. By Horace Smith. 32 Pp. H.E. Harper & Brothers.

Every word tingles with zest and dash of the briny waves. This gruff and navy captain was a blockade-runner and his whole life was packed full of more unceasing adventure than any pirate's or buccaner's. He was the man who commanded the Dauntless and The Three Friends, the man who was offered half a million dollars to rescue Dreyfus from Devil's Island.

THE FIGHTING BLADE. By Beulah Harris. 124 Pp. H.E. Henry Holt & Company.

The hero is a quiet, boyish, German soldier serving Cromwell who through a deadly duelist, is at bottom heroic and self-sacrificing. He loves a little tom-boy unscrupulous lot of guardians and fairly made a prisoner in her home. Perils and stirring episodes abound, rising to a vivid climax.

THE DEFENDERS. By Foy Gillespie. 32 Pp. H.E. The Cosmopolitan Press.

With the Alamo, San Jacinto, and the life of the pioneers of Texas as a background, this story is one of wild adventure and heroic deeds.

HIRAM BLAIR. By Drew Tufis. 44 Pp. A. C. McClurg & Company.

Hiram, a big, lanky, raw-boned countryman, a natural-born "horse-trader," illiterate and in a way uncouth, is the central dominating figure of this story. He is also an astute, adult politician, loving the game for its own sake and not at all scrupulous as to his methods. Add to this a genuinely spontaneous humor and unswerving loyalty and generosity to his friends; and it may be readily understood what a striking character the author has succeeded in depicting. Incidentally there is a mighty interesting love story in which Sheriff Blair is the deus-ex-machina.

CAPTAIN MARTHA MARY. By Avery Abbott. 32 Pp. H.E. The Century Company.

The sympathetic little volume has an added interest, as Mrs. Abbott is an Omaha woman, and is the story of a little girl of the townships and of how she tries to feed and shelter her brood of younger brothers and sisters, with odds much against her. And though the story deals at times with such unfortunate incidents as dirt and poverty and empty stomachs, there is more sunshine than shadow in it, especially when the "kids' lady" carries the little family off to the help and comfort of a sheltering home. Martha Mary's expeditions and her brood's high spirits keep the reader smiling through all the pages, and her passionate devotion to Happy, the tiniest brother of all, is an exquisite bit of child life.

ALEXANDER'S BRIDGE. By Wills S. Cather. 128 Pp. H. Houghton-Mifflin Company.

This first novel by a popular short story writer tells of the life of a great engineer—a builder of bridges—a man of rare power and charm, and the influence upon his life of two women—his wife in Boston and the old friend of his Latin quarter days. The story is dramatic, intense and haunting to the memory, and will be of especial interest to Nebraska people, where the author is so well known.

THE OLD NEST. By Robert Hughes. 128 Pp. H. The Century Company.

The story of an old father and mother left alone in the big house which once had been full of overflowing of restles, happy, loving boys and girls, and of the mother's lonely longing for the sons and daughters out in the great world, so busy in their success and new ties that the oft-promised visit home is put off year after year.

POLLY OF THE HOSPITAL STAFF. By Emma C. Dowd. 256 Pp. H. Houghton-Mifflin Company.

A story for grownups and children. Little Polly meets with a street accident and is taken to a hospital, where she spends several months. She is a quiet, cheerful little body and, even while ill, accuses her attendants by her conversation. Later she cheers the other children with her games and stories. So dependent do all become on her that, when she has fully recovered, she is made a regular member of the staff.

THE ADVENTURES OF POLLY AND GILBERT IN WASHINGTON. C. S. Lydia Waldo Locking. 32 Pp. H. The Cosmopolitan Press.

Grown-ups as well as children will be interested in the story of Gilbert's visit to his relatives in Washington. For while he was there he and his cousin, Polly, saw Washington leisurely and pleasantly. Older members of the family visit with one another to see that the two children were thoroughly informed concerning all the public structures that make Washington so beautiful and so imposing.

THE BANTAM. By Brewer Corcoran. 24 Pp. H. Harper & Brothers.

Here is a story-rich in its humor, picturesque in its slang-of a very real youth at a preparatory school. It is a book for the father who went there and for the son who is now there. "The Bantam" is the son of a general in the Philippines, sent home by his father to his own old school.

A CHILD'S JOURNEY WITH DICKENS. By Kate Douglas Wiggin. 32 Pp. H. Houghton-Mifflin Company.

In her inimitable way Mrs. Wiggin tells of a meeting with Charles Dickens when she was a slip of a girl. Heart sick at not having been taken to hear Dickens read at Portland, she found herself the next day on the same train with this man who had written the books that were part of her very existence. More wonderful still, she soon found herself in the same seat with the great author, and then ensued the never-to-be-forgotten conversation.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE SMOX. By D. Lamm. 32 Pp. H. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company.

The story is based on the last desperate stand of the brave and warlike Smox tribes against the relentless tide of white men's civilization, the thrilling scenes of which were enacted on the Minnesota frontier in the early days of the civil war. History is not in the least distorted in telling the adventures of two sturdy lads, and the value of the story equals its power to hold the reader.

HARPER'S BOATING BOOK FOR BOYS. By Charles G. Davis, consulting editor. 32 Pp. H.E. Harper & Brothers.

A guide to motor boating, sailing, canoeing and rowing, fully illustrated from photographs, drawings and diagrams.

LOST FARM CAMP. By Harry Herbert Knibbs. 32 Pp. H.E. Houghton-Mifflin Company.

An exhilarating story of the Maine woods, where a young man from the city frustrates the designs of land-hungry capitalists and fights his way to the admiration and affection of "Miss" Avery, his daughter, "Swickey," and other red-blooded characters of the backwoods.
