

White Desperate Desmond, the inter-national crook, is waiting in the cold out-side the caar's palace, he is further an-noyed by seeing Claude and Rosamond inside. The lovers are being enterrained quite informally by Nicholas, on whom Claude's manly frankness and Rosa-mond's Deauty has made a creat imprenond's beauty has made a great impres-ion. Claude praises the imperial caviar.

IL-A CLOSER WATCH. To get a closer view of the dinner Desmond climbs upon the folding awaing of the floor below. The villain lopes to hear some remark that may aid him in capturing Rosamond, for he is more than determined to make the girl his wife. Like some evil bird. Desmond is perched

III - READY FOR RAIN Some people say that if you have a corn and it aches, rain is coming. Others predict rain by rheumatic pains. Others look at the clouds or the actions of the birds. A few look in the paper to see what the weather forecast is. Anyway, here we have a maid in the palace. The maid has a pain in her toe. Ready for rain she

IV.-KNOCKED OVER

The simple precaution of the maid-ser-vant has very serious results for the peer-ing Desmond. The awning on which the villain was perched is suddenly lowered and his foothold lost, Desimond goes hurf-ling through the air. Instead of pletting the capture of Rosamond, Deamond hus now to think of some method of saving BUSINESS CHANCES.

Luckily for Desmond there is something to break his fall. Uniuckily for the something, he does break the fall. The villain falls fair and square upon one of the palace police, and squashes that guardian of the cast flat upon the ground Such an act is one that no-self respecting police man, Russian or otherwise, could afford there to identify him. The czar sets whatever brains he has to work trying to devise a punishment. It will be shown in tomorrow's paper.
