Ten Years of Advancement of the Union Pacific Railroad

TEN YEARS AGO THIS MONTH as clipped from the newspapers of that date.

Announcement was made at the Union Pacific headquarters that the double tracking of the line from Omaha to Valley was to be completed in the near future.

A comparison of double tracking figures between the years 1902 and 1912 show a vast and interesting growth. Prior to 1902 the Union Pacific had a total of only 74.41 miles of double track. Today there is an unbroken stretch of double track of 364 miles from Omaha to Julesburg, Colo.; while there is a total of 694 miles of double track on the main line and branches—not including 130 miles now being laid.

While reviewing the above figures, note a few of the improvements and extensions other than double-tracking that have been brought about during the last decade.

The equipment of the entire line with a system of automatic electric block safety signals affording protection to patrons and employees.

The ballasting of its roadbed with Sherman gravel (disintegrated granite) insuring the traveler freedom from all road dust.

The straightening of sharp curves, the elimination of steep grades, the shortening of distances by cut-offs, the tunneling of solid granite mountains, the filling in of deep valleys, the bridging of wide expanses of water and the making of various other improvements that contribute to the comfort and safety of its patrons.
