TORNADO KILLS FIFTY PERSONS

Mayor and city council have started a fund and are providing for the destitute. Families are widely separated in the confusion. Tonight husbands are searching for their wives and mothers for their children. Men stopped from time to time in their work of rescue to ask passing acquaintances for news of friends and relatives.

One of the first names given out as among the dead was that of Andrew Bryan, manager of the Ludhops Anderson company of Orilla, whose wagon and carriage warehouse was destroyed. He was a member of the council of the board of trade of Regina.

Crossing the railway tracks several of the largest wholesale houses in the city were unroofed, their heavily laden floors falling to the bottom as their supports were loosened.

Two Fires Extinguished.

Two fires broke out, but as most of the fire halls escaped, the storm and the water pressure were not impaired, the flames were confined to the ruins where they started.

All electric lights and power wires were rendered useless and the city is in darkness. All the conveyances were pressed into service to convey the dead to the morgue and the injured to the hospitals.

The storm continued northwest from Regina through central Saskatchewan, doing great damage, but no loss of life is reported outside of Regina.

Heavy losses to buildings are reported from Qu-Appelle and also at Melville.

NO BREAK IN THE DEADLOCK

The convention should not nominate today was not shared by the party leaders who frankly admitted they could not see the way to untangle the knot that bound the convention. Vice Chairman Hall, member of the national committee from Nebraska said:

"I believe we will be here for a week. Certainly I do not look for a nomination for two or three days."

There were no overnight changes in the situation so far as could be learned. Leaders of the Clark, Wilson and Underwood movements most fear the coming of a moment when the delegates, weary with the struggle, might trust leadership aside and choose a candidate whose name was opportunistically sprung on the convention.

As the situation presented itself neither Clark nor Wilson appeared to have enough votes to win as one or the other with an alliance with the Underwood. Harmon and Marshall forces could sustain expected losses and still control more than a third of the convention.

National Chairman Mack would not venture an opinion as to how the deadlock would be broken.

Bitter denunciation and acrimonious discussion was frequently heard today in the corridors of the hotels, where the delegates gathered and the statements of Speaker Clark and Mr. Bryan were read with avidity. Many political friendships approaching the parting of the ways and this, with the feeling that one candidate for the nomination has as good a chance as another made it extremely difficult for more pacific leaders to hold the antagonistic elements together in simple friendly rivalry.

WITH GRANT ON MT. MCGREGOR

Old Reporter Tells How the Dying General Wrote Questions About Home Folks.

Appropos the birthday anniversary, April 21, of former President U. S. Grant, Frank B. Gessner, who twenty-seven years ago was the chief political reporter for the Cincinnati Times-Star, told about the only time he ever interviewed Grant, when he got what is said to have been the last interview with the famous union general.

"I had never been as far east as New York," said Mr. Gessner, "and when I arrived at Mount McGregor, on July 8, 1885, and found a lot of representatives of the big metropolitan dailies camped about, I felt I was up against it hard. General Grant's aversion to being interviewed was a matter of common knowledge. How could I, a raw youth from midwest, hope to obtain what some of us were unable to land?"

"I approached the house with my heart in my boots. I did not dare go up to the front door, but circled the place three or four times. Through an open window I could see the general at his desk, working on his book. After a little time he came out on the porch, wrapped up to his neck, though the day was intensely warm, and sat down with the members of his family about him. It was then between 4 and 5 o'clock.

"Finally, I remembered I knew a lot of relatives of the general out in Clermont county, Ohio, and I figured out that if I could get a note to him telling of this he might send word for me to come and see him, so I managed to gather courage enough to land me at the entrance to the back porch.

"Just then a colored man, whom I knew from his picture to be Harrison, the general's body servant, came along. "Oh, Harrison!" I called, just as if I knew him well.

"He stopped and answered my greeting. I told him I knew all the general's folks out in Ohio and I thought the general might like to see me. I asked if he would take a note in.

"Why, certainly, sir," he replied. So I hastily scribbled a few words and Harrison went around the house. During the three or four minutes he was gone I quite made up my mind that there was nothing doing. Therefore, Harrison's words when he came back were almost a shock. "Come right up, sir," he said. "The general will be glad to see you. He wrote a little note on the back of your letter."

"It read thus: 'I will be glad to see you, but I cannot speak, not even in a whisper.' "I hurried up and was led to where General Grant was sitting, approaching him from the back. As Harrison said, "This is the gentleman, general," he turned his head and looked over his glasses. Then he motioned me to a seat. He was writing something on a pad, which he explained by a nod was intended for his wife and when he handed it to her, Mrs. Grant laughed.

"Then he wrote something on the pad and handed it to me. It was a question about some of his relatives. I answered and then I remarked that he had an uncle, Samuel Simpson, who lived at Bantam and that he was remarkably well. The general seized the pad and began to write vigorously.

"He will be 90 years old in September,"

For the WOMEN FOLK

Novel Cooler

Ingenuity is truly a great accomplishment, and sometimes a comfortable one. An Omaha man who has apartments in the west side of one of the larger apartment houses has found that the afternoon makes evening at home most uncomfortable warm. So he is devising a cooling scheme similar to those used in eastern cafes. The ingenious man is having made a large zinc box which will hold ice. It will have an open top and electric fans will be placed back of the improvised cooler to send the cool air through the rooms. Through this "ice box" the heat sufferer is certain he will enjoy his evenings at home.

A party of young women left this morning for Wall Lake, Ia., where they will spend the month of July. They have taken the cottage "Lot-of-Fun" and will be chaperoned by Mrs. Ross Longnecker and Mrs. Earl Ward. The party included:

Class Reunion

The class of 1908 of St. Joseph's parochial school celebrated its fourth anniversary and first reunion at the home of Miss Gertrude Laux, 2755 South Ninth street, Sunday. The members met at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and renewed their school friendships. Later in the afternoon the party made a trip to Riverfront park. At 8 o'clock supper was served by Mrs. Laux, Mrs. Wachter and Mrs. Wachter. Five members who were not present were out of town. They were Stephen Kouchel, Joseph Hoids, and Henry Beeson, who is in the navy on duty on the battleship Ohio in Cuban waters, and Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Miller. Two members, Martin Hausinger of Lincoln and Anton Chisborad, student at the Franciscan convent of Tootopolis, Ill., were present. All enjoyed themselves and in the evening games were played by lantern light and as the lights flickered and died out at midnight the party ended. Those present were:

Misses— Olga Bask, Margaret Feller, Agnes Hartung, Louise Williams, Mary Meyers, Lillian Fischer, Kate Hoek, Gertrude Laux, Editha Klein, Frances Laux, Caroline Molner, Lena Sawatzki, Peter Cadonitich, Henry Schmitz, Anton Chisborad, William Tris, Anton Cross, Carl Stangel, Joseph Koley, Frank Zeh, Frank Lang, Martin Hausinger, Egan Klein, Fred Oeldemann, George Maunich.

I read, He will well outlive me."

"This strain of hopelessness was apparent in almost everything he wrote on the pad. In speaking of the scenes of his boyhood, for instance, he wrote, 'I used to take great pleasure in visiting there, but I have made my last visit.' "He himself tore off the first sheet he had scribbled, but you may guess that after that I grabbed the pad each time as soon as he had finished writing. I sat there quite a time, Mrs. Grant joining in the conversation. Finally I told General Grant I was going back to Ohio the next day and I would like to take a message. He sat looking for a few moments over the top of his glasses. Then he wrote:

"Present my kindest regards to them all and say that my disease is about as reported. There is no talking when the end will come, although it cannot be a great while. Without some setback I might live until cold weather sets in in the fall."

"He died fifteen days later,"—New York Sun.

LIFE AMONG THE CANNIBALS

Amazing Adventures of American Girl in the Jungles of West Africa.

Of absorbing interest is the romance of the jungle unfolded by Miss Vera Simonton, a modern pioneer in petticoats, who returned to civilization a short time ago, after spending a year in the West African cannibal country, on the line of the equator, and who is now engaged in writing a novel founded upon her experiences, entitled "Hell's Playground," which will shortly be published.

Miss Simonton had many adventures and queer experiences, and relates with amusement how, during her twelve-month sojourn in the heart of the African continent, she had twenty proposals—and all from cannibal kings. Miss Simonton penetrated regions where no white woman had before been seen, and her arrival created a great sensation among the natives.

The first proposal she received was from Orungu, a Nkom chief, who came loaded with gifts of knives, tom-toms, beads and quaint musical instruments, and offered them to Miss Simonton if she would become his thirteenth wife. She endeavored to parley with him by pointing out, with the aid of an interpreter, that thirteen was an unlucky number, on which he offered to dismiss one of his other wives and she could be the twelfth. But the offer was declined as diplomatically as possible.

On another occasion a native chief named Akana sent a proposal through a delegation consisting of three native women, one of whom proved to be the

MISS REINSCHREIBER IS MARRIED SUNDAY EVENING.

MRS. DAVID FEBLOWITZ.

Weddings

Feblowitz-Reinschreiber.

Bright's hall was the scene of a pretty wedding Sunday evening, when Miss Ida Florence Reinschreiber, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Reinschreiber, 908 Francis street, became the bride of David Feblowitz, Rabbi Frederick Cohn officiating.

After the ceremony a wedding supper was served in the dining room, where an orchestra furnished splendid music. Later a reception and dance was given in the main hall. This was made beautiful by profuse decorations of pink and white, the bride's colors, together with large palms and white wedding bells.

The bride was beautiful in her wedding gown of white satin veiled in embroidered silk marquisette and made elaborate by silver and pearl trimmings. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley and her veil was held in place by lilies.

Miss Bethel Reinschreiber, sister of the bride was maid of honor and wore an attractive yellow satin dress covered with changeable marquisette. Miss Ida Kulakofsky, Miss Hannah Kulakofsky and Miss Ethel Muekin of Sioux City, cousins of the bride, were the bridesmaids and were gowned charmingly in pink and white. They carried pink roses. Little Bernice Kulakofsky, in pink, carried the ring in a calla lily. The matron of honor, Mrs. I. Kulakofsky, wore a gown of black beaded net over pink satin.

keeper of his other wives, and the two others her assistants.

Miss Simonton mentions the curious fact that the native chiefs whom she refused seemed to think that she rejected their proposals because she was not fat enough. She says that in the course of her travels in the jungle she found that, when a slim girl from 10 to 14 was betrothed, she was put into the fattening house and forced to eat bananas all day long; and that no native girl who does not possess an abundance of adipose tissue cares to become a bride.

All sorts of gifts were offered to this intrepid lady if she would consent to make her home in the jungle—a dead snake, an elephant's ear, alligator's eggs, skins of wild animals, carved ebony and ivory, skulls of apes, monkeys, antelopes and gorillas were among the most remarkable gifts proffered.

Although her position was extremely dangerous at times, on account of the hostility of the natives, Miss Simonton quaintly remarks, apropos of her extraordinary marriage proposals: "I felt like a little girl in a strange ring-around-a-rosy game, with the ring made up of twenty kinds and their astonishing engagement presents."—Philadelphia Record.
