One of these was Jack Rose, who, it was learned held the jury peated, in an oratorical flow of excellent English, the confession of his part in the murder plot and his alleged graft relations with Lieutenant Becker, which he had already made to District Attorney Whitman in writing.

One of the jurors is reported to have remarked that he had not heard the one additional fact of importance which the little bald headed gambler added to his previous accusations against the police lieutenant was, it was learned, that Becker himself was in effect the paymaster of the murder crew.

Rose today also told the jury the which he charges that Jack Su. in. the former "king of the newsboys," played in the murder plot. He said that on the night of the murder, Sullivan, after riding around town with Becker, went to "Bridgie" Webber's gambling house where the murder crew gathered, and then to the Hotel Metropole with directions to find out whether Rosenthal was dining at the hotel. This Stillivan did. Rose said, and reported to the men who shortly afterward committed the murder, where their intended in its pint witch hazel. This has remarks: victim could be found.
