Get-Together Spirit Shown When All Go to the Picnic

FOR THE second time in its history, the Nebraska Telephone company had all its employes together for an afternoon and evening of no work and all picnic. At this second annual picnic at the Rod and Gun club nearly fifteen hundred employes gathered for the good time. Here the "hello" girls were permitted to throw confetti right into the face of the president of the company; the auditors entered into a rope-pulling contest, or so-called tug-of-war, with the bookkeepers; the construction men locked horns with the office men in a game of base ball, and the entire force of the company stood glued to the ground watching with greatest interest while the linemen entered into a spectacular contest by teams in trimming and setting a pole and affixing the cross arm, and last year all had the opportunity of sticking closely under their parasols while they saw the sun blistering the face of President Yost as he umpired the ball game for the boys.

"President Yost is a good scout," "President Yost is a good fellow," and similar remarks are frequently heard on the picnic ground, as Mr. Yost mingles freely with the crowd and takes part in the various forms of amusement provided for the afternoon.

So carefully are these picnics planned and managed that the perpetual day and night service of the telephone service is not interrupted, although every person employed by the company, in Omaha and vicinity, gets an opportunity to attend. The day "hello" girls simply remain on duty during the afternoon while the night force enjoys the day part of the picnic. The night force is provided with an early luncheon at the picnic and is then taken to the city to relieve the day force in time to get them to the grounds for the regular evening spread.
