MANY NEBRASKANS ATTEND

Meeting of Commercial Secretaries Held in Indianapolis.

COMMISSIONER GUILD PRESIDENT

Matters of Great Interest to Cities Are to Be Brought Up and Given Consideration at Sessions.

In the field of commercial secretaries, Commissioner J. M. Guild of the Commercial Club of Omaha occupies a prominent place. As president of the Central Association of Commercial Secretaries, he will attend the annual convention of that body at the Claypool hotel, Indianapolis, September 20 and 21. This is no small organization, as its membership extends throughout the sixteen central states from Pennsylvania on the east to Colorado on the west, and from the Canadian border south to the Ohio river. Within this area is approximately one-half of the population of the United States. The honor of presiding over the meeting of secretaries from such cities as Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Denver, etc., is therefore no small one. Each state has a vice president, and W. S. Whitten, secretary of the Lincoln Commercial club holds that office for Nebraska.

If any class of men need to get together once in a while it is those who daily attend to the details of town boosting and city building. In their meetings they talk in their own language and take no action that is binding in any way on the organizations they represent. The conventions of the central association are not for the discussion of current questions, but are experience meetings in the fullest sense of the word. When in 1909, the need of such a forum became evident, the Omaha Commercial club, on learning of the central association and its purposes, hesitated not a moment, but authorized its commissioner to join it as a charter member. Since then no investment of the club's money and his time has brought bigger returns. Acquaintance is invaluable in this line of work and makes possible many things that can be handled only between men who understand each other. One city can gain information and pointers from another on request, and can very often warn each other against some fraud, when acquaintance and confidence exist between the two. As the result of the central association it is not necessary for one organization to follow the road of experience blindly to some expensive and often fruitless end, if another member has already traveled that way. In their business meetings every man is an open book to his fellow secretaries. Briefly, the purposes of the organization are to promote the efficiency of its members in organization work, bring them in closer touch with the problems common to all workers in this comparatively new field, and enable each secretary to better serve the community in which he resides; to bring its members, through the medium of the annual conventions, into personal contact with men representing important movements in civic, commercial and industrial development; to help each secretary, through greater efficiency and widened experience to avoid experiments that have proven failures; to broaden acquaintance of its members, foster good-fellowship and advance the standards of the profession in every possible way.

Many Nebraskans Attend. What it would mean to have a dozen or more secretaries of the interior of Nebraska attend the Indianapolis meeting, has been laid before the various organizations in the state, and in addition to Mr. Guild, there will go from Nebraska, E. V. Parrish, manager of the Omaha Publicity bureau; W. S. Whitten, secretary of the Lincoln Commercial club; A. M. Conners, Grand Island; H. B. Howell, Hastings; C. E. Oehler, Kearney; George F. Wolf, Fremont; R. D. McFadden, secretary-treasurer of the Nebraska State Association of Commercial Clubs; Holdrege; I. A. Herriek of the Deadwood Business club and O. B. Towne of the Council Bluffs Commercial club are also expected to attend. Colorado will have three or four, representing Denver, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, etc.

The active membership of the association is confined to paid secretaries in cities of 25,000 and over, while lesser communities hold association membership. All get the same benefit from the meetings, however, and all have an equal share in the discussions. This year's program, just sent out by Secretary-Treasurer C. F. Terhune of Clinton, Ia., covers the entire field of Commercial club work and the speakers are invariably men of long experience, and are experts in their line. Some of the subjects are: "Know Your Own City," by Thorndike Deland, secretary of the Denver Chamber of Commerce; "Getting Conventions," by Milton Carmichael, secretary-treasurer of Detroit Convention and Tourists' bureau; "City Building," by E. M. Rastall, industrial secretary of Duluth Commercial club; "Advertising and Publicity," by H. F. Miller, business manager of Chicago Association of Commerce; "Co-operation of Municipal Authorities with Commercial Organizations," by E. M. Clendening, Secretary Commercial club of Kansas City. In addition to these are such subjects as "Trade Extension," "The Financing of a Commercial Organization," "Membership," "Transportation," "State Organizations," "Industrial Promotion," and so on.

Round Table Talk. Even during luncheons, those who attend the secretaries convention do not stop, but on each of the two days while luncheon, there will be a round-table discussion of various topics. "Co-operation with the Press" the first day, under direction of Byrnes H. Gitchell, secretary of Detroit Board of Commerce, and "Our Mistakes" by R. G. McClure, secretary of Indianapolis Commercial club the second day.

A banquet will be tendered the delegates by the business organizations of the city of Indianapolis the evening of September 20. This will be given at the Claypool hotel, and President Guild is scheduled to act as toastmaster. The banquet speakers will be Harry A. Wheeler of Chicago, on "The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America," of which he is president, Hon. C. J. Doyle, fire marshal of the state of Illinois, will speak on "Fire Waste," and Hon. Charles A. Bookwalter, former mayor of Indianapolis, will speak on the "Effect of Interurban Railways on Commercial Development."

AK-SAR-BEN ROYALTY IS IDLE

Thomas A. Fry, Ninth of Imperial Line, Retires from Business. HAS GOOD BUSINESS RECORD. Worked Up to Position of District Manager for Booth Fisheries Company - Charter Member of Board of Governors.

What shall we do with our idle kingly? The question is pressing for answer on the house of Ak-Sar-Ben. Thomas A. Fry, ninth of the royal line, is out of a job voluntarily, but Samson grieves not, for these are Samson's busy days, with lots of jobs in view for expert hands to do, and he who buckles to is assured of the gracious favor of the coming king.

Mr. Fry has resigned his position as district manager of the Booth Fisheries company, closing a record of thirty-three years of service and a quarter of a century as the head of the Omaha branch. Starting with the Booth company as a youngster in St. Louis in November, 1879, he studied and worked in every branch of the business from the ground up, and so thoroughly mastered the details that he, in May, 1887, was sent to Omaha to open and manage the branch here. Such was the success of the Omaha house that in ten years it had become the central distributing point for all the Booth business west of the Mississippi river, with Mr. Fry in charge of the branches at St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sioux City, Lincoln, Omaha, Des Moines, Davenport and Burlington.

When the Booth company went into the hands of receivers a few years ago Mr. Fry continued in charge of the Omaha territory, and in one year turned in one-third of the total cash paid to the receivers, a fact which materially expedited the reorganization of the company. Repeated offers and tempting inducements have been made by the company to Mr. Fry to lure him to Chicago and the east. As a means to that end, for two years past he has had charge of the entire oyster business of the company, with a roving commission that took him to the Atlantic coast frequently. But the inducements had no effect. Mr. Fry would not move. Here was his home, his family, his friends in social and business life, and money could not purchase a change. "Omaha is my home," he remarked feelingly in telling of his activities, "and always will be my home. I will not stop boasting for Omaha and Nebraska while I live."

In all movements for the upbuilding of Omaha, Mr. Fry has taken a leading part. A charter member of the board of governors of Ak-Sar-Ben, he served ten years on the board, and held down the throne for a few brief hours with austere majesty. He is a live wire in the Commercial club, a member of the executive committee; president of the Drexel Shoe company, the Fry Shoe company and the Nebraska Savings and Loan association.

There will be fine brass cuspidors, and mahogany desks on the hands of the Nebraska Telephone company as soon as the old plant of the defunct Independent Telephone company ceases to operate in Omaha. It has been the wonder of some of the employees of the Nebraska Telephone company, since they have had occasion to step into the Independent plant, how the new company had the nerve to stock up with the "awful" furniture that was found there when the Bell company bought the plant.

"Why, there were mahogany roll top desks till you couldn't tell," said one of the Bell people, "and giant brass 'goboons' that must have cost some $15 apiece. These cuspidors were too aristocratic for us over in the plant of the Bell company."

They Make Fine Racks. And there was no question but that he was right, for some of these fancy brass cuspidors have been hauled over to the Bell office, where they now adorn the offices as umbrella racks. They swallow up an umbrella nearly to the hilt, and as an umbrella rack makes a tasty appearance.

"To think anyone over there ever had the temerity to expostulate in one of those costly vessels," exclaim the men of the Bell office now as they stick their three-dollar umbrellas in the polished brass "goboon."

Desks Something Swell. But the mahogany desks are still more costly items in the stock of furniture that adorned the rooms of the Independent Telephone company. There was practically nothing in the way of woodwork in the furniture that was not mahogany. The Bell telephone people have always had to work on polished quarter-sawn oak desks and tables, and while some of them of late have expressed some jealousy of the former employees of the defunct company, none of them have as yet had the nerve to haul over one of the mahogany desks into the Bell offices for personal use, although many of the mahogany desks are now idle.

SENIORS AND JUNIORS OF DENTAL SCHOOL MEET. Over 100 seniors and juniors of the Creighton Dental college came together last night at a goodfellowship meeting when the former class gave a reception to the juniors in the gymnasium of the school. Prof. Kretzeniger of last year's faculty gave a short talk to the students as did Ted Leary of Council Bluffs. J. S. Smith, president of the senior class, welcomed the juniors to the annual meeting and Ted Wagoner, president of the junior class, responded. Following a short program of music refreshments were in order.
