

GRAIN AND PRODUCE MARKET

Wheat Trade Responds to the Action of the Corn Market.

LITTLE DAMAGE DONE TO CORN

Oats Market Has Little Speculative News, with a Tendency to Look for Lower Prices—Cash Oats Unchanged.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 25.—There are some dangerously low temperatures in the northwest. Just how they extend to the rest of the country is not indicated by the early messages. This is mentioned because any radical act on the part of the northwest will have influence on the rest of the country. The weather conditions in the northwest, and to that extent, at least, the outlook is bullish. On the other hand, the weather statistics on wheat, the domestic figures on increasing supplies, the certainty of sharp competition from both Canada and Russia, and the light volume of outside trade are all on the side of the sellers, who are patient enough to wait for good wells.

It is cloudy and cold over Nebraska and other western corn states. Messages are giving temperatures from 35 to 40 degrees below the normal for the country. It is accompanied by a claim of damage to the corn crop. It will take later advice to show how far this is from the fact. The prospect here for the world's statistics on wheat is a fairly bullish feeling in the local trade, especially in December contracts. For thirty days past the weather has been very good. There was nothing in the old cash corn, or September situation to justify the sellers' position in the current month. It now looks more like a final upset of the late September than at any time, with reports of a big short interest outstanding. On strong wells, no doubt, there will be a further selling of May corn, especially if the weather turns fine.

Cash corn unchanged. The oats market continues to be depressed by any particular speculative news, but more tendency to look for lower prices, but more pressure from the actual reports must take place before such a result is probable.
