The Return of the Colonel of Koepenick

a party of elegantly dressed ladies cast admiring glances in my direction. My heart swelled with joy. I expanded my chest, and assumed a haughty manner.

"For the scene of my great adventure I had selected Koepenick, an old-fashioned and puritanical suburb of Berlin, with which I was very familiar through having worked there as a cobbler some ten years before. Although I knew all the municipal officials by sight, I felt sure that they would not recognize me in my glittering uniform. On my way to the Rathaus (the city hall) I met a squad of soldiers led by a sergeant. They saluted me humbly. At a wave of my hand, the sergeant stopped.

"You go to the barracks and tell the Lieutenant that Colonel von Brandenburg will use your men on an important mission," I said.

"The sergeant bowed deeply and went his way. I led the men to a livery stable and ordered two carriages. On our arrival at the Rathaus, I left eight soldiers outside, and took two with me as an escort. Ignoring the various clerks as I passed them, I unceremoniously entered the office of the burgomaster, Dr. Langerhans. The old gentleman was on a sofa, comfortably enjoying his afternoon nap. He turned pale upon seeing me appear, accompanied by soldiers. Without beat ing about the bush, I declared that I had an order from the Kaiser to arrest him and to transport him immediately to Berlin.

"But, Herr Colonel," he stammered pathetically, "I am innocent!"

"You can explain all that in Berlin. I am here to carry out the orders of my superiors," I said grimly.

"The prisoner begged for permission to telephone to his wife. This point I conceded; and while I was sealing and packing away his books, his wife rushed in and begged frantically that she be allowed to go to Berlin with her husband. I gave my consent, and placed the two in a carriage, under guard. The clerks and porters about the Rathaus were in a state of mental paralysis; their terror-stricken faces as they watched what was going on were too amusing for words.

"Without wasting any time, I took two more soldiers and hurried into the office of Herr von Wiltberg, the municipal treasurer, who, like the burgomaster, was sleeping peacefully on a sofa. The treasurer was evidently a very nervous man; for he jumped to his feet, trembling and pale, and was unable to say a word for a long time. When I announced gruffly that he, like his chief, was a prisoner to be taken to Berlin in chains, he almost fainted. I could not help pitying the man as he pointed to his books, stuttering:

"Herr Colonel, but you should first examine my books! They are all in order—in perfect order—I tell you."

"Tell that in Berlin," I repeated mechanically.

Stop Paring Corns

End Them in a Scientific Way

Don't keep on paring the same old corn. That merely takes off the top layer. And paring often leads to infection.

A chemist has invented a wax which removes them. It is used in the Blue-jay plaster.

This little plaster is applied in a jiffy. It stops the pain instantly, and it fits so neatly that you simply forget it.

The heat of the foot sets the wax gently working. It loosens the corn, root, callous and all and in 48 hours the whole corn comes out.

No soreness, no pain, no discomfort. And no more corn. Tight shoes may bring another, but that corn can't come back. This little plaster now removes a million corns a month. Let it get rid of yours.

- A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
- B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
- C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
- D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.
