

THERE are men living today who can remember when the fields and farms of Nebraska were part of the vast unbroken prairie. Each year they marvel that products to the value of millions of dollars are gathered in this, the richest valley in the world.

When the young men of today are gray-haired, unquestionably they will look back upon changes equally marvelous. What this development shall be depends upon Nebraska's present citizens and the efforts they make to carry on the development as their fathers have done.

How many of us know what is now being accomplished in this broad state of ours? How many appreciate the immediate possibilities of our wonderful soil? How many comprehend the opportunities, both in the city and on the farm, that lie open to those who are willing to work and to those who have money to invest?

With a vast amount of labor and with painstaking care, the facts, both with regard to the present achievements and the future opportunities in Nebraska, have been gathered by the organization of The Omaha Bee.

They are presented as completely as possible in an attractive form, not only as a milestone of past achievement, but more particularly to inspire future development, by showing those who live within our boundaries, and also those who live outside the limits of our state, what is in store for the future Nebraska.

C. C. ROSEWATER.

