been overlooked to make of the new palace a dining place that will be the pride of Omaha, and that will please all patrons. It is a cafe in which one may eat, enjoying both the food and environments. It is so tastefully decorated, so well appointed and so carefully arranged that there can be no criticism except that which is favorable and no verdict except that which is a judgment for the owner of the newest of Omaha's cafes.

A word as to the location. We can imagine no other spot in Omaha that would promise more for such a cafe as Mr. Wroth has provided than the present one. Situated in the very heart of nearly all that is important in the city it will prove a convenient dining place for patrons and they will gladly embrace the opportunity.

Several of Omaha's leading builders and furnishers contributed to make Wroth's new cafe the finest in the west. W. E. Stockham was the architect and the beauty of design and convenience of arrangements must be attributed to his skill. Perhaps the most striking feature of the exterior of the building is the beautiful white enamel brick which faces it. This was supplied by the Hydraulic-Press brick company.

The interior decorating and painting were done by the W. G. Colling company, Henry Lehman & Son and Fuchs, Son and Blind.

Another modern feature of Wroth's equipment is an ice making machine which was installed by the Baker Ice Machine company of Omaha. This firm recently shipped one of their plants to Calcutta, India. It almost goes without saying that the elaborate bar and bar fixtures came from the C. B. Liver company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the United States, while the glassware and ornamental table service was bought of the Omaha Crockery company, and the kitchen utensils from Milton Rogers & Sons company.

In speaking of his new place Mr. Wroth recently said: "It is my intention to supply my patrons with nothing but the highest class of foodstuffs and service to be obtained anywhere and my aim to cater to all who desire that grade of attention."
