THE SOCIETY OF THE BEE-HIVE

By MELLIFICIA. Thursday, January 23, 1913.

IF THERE is a society woman in Omaha who does not wish she could have been at the Helen Gould wedding, I do not believe she would want to admit it and set herself up as so different from her sisters. A number of Omaha people have been in the circle of acquaintance with Miss Gould, people chiefly around the Union Pacific headquarters, and she has passed through Omaha several times, stopping between trains, but so far as I have been able to learn none of the select list of one hundred invitations was addressed to any one in Omaha. That does not mean, however, that folks here have not been interested in the big wedding. The women are discussing the marvelous wedding gown as described in the dispatch, the wonderful rope of pearls, the costly presents, and particularly the $30,000,000 constituting the bride's fortune. The peculiar thing, I was almost going to say strange thing, but it is not strange, is that no one seems to think the fucky groom worth more than a passing remark.

HONOR MRS. ED CREIGHTON

Students Hold Memorial for Wife of Founder of University.

SOLEMN HIGH MASS IS SAID

College Has Grown and Prospered Since the First Bequest—Others Help Materially in Carrying Out the Work.

The death of Mrs. Mary Lucretia Creighton, wife of the founder of Creighton university, was commemorated with a solemn high mass in St. John's Catholic church yesterday. Mr. John D. Creighton, Mrs. Matthew McGinn, Mrs. Purdy, Mrs. Ittner and daughter Mary were present, as well as the entire student body of the arts department. Rev. M. Brown, pastor of St. John's parish was the celebrant and was assisted by Rev. William Quinlan, S. J., his deacon and by Prof. Faruzynski, S. J., as sub-deacon.

Mary Lucretia Creighton was the wife of Edward Creighton, after whom the college is named. Edward Creighton died intestate on November 5, 1874. He had intended to found a college, but he passed away before his work was begun. As he left no will, his wife was not bound legally to carry out his plan. But as a memorial to her husband's memory, Mrs. Creighton made preparations for the founding of an institution. Death overtook her before she could execute her plans, and she died on January 20, 1876, about two years after the death of Edward Creighton.

In her will she left the sum of $100,000 for the founding of a college, half of which was to be spent in buildings and the other half invested in securities, the interest of which was to maintain the school. The late John A. Creighton, James Creighton and Hermann Kountze were named as executors of the estate, and the college, on completion, was to be turned over to the right reverend bishop of Omaha, Rev. James O'Connor was then bishop, and the property was turned over to him on July 1, 1878. Bishop O'Connor, finding it impossible to handle the institution, transferred it to the Jesuit order December 4, 1878.

The college opened on September 2, 1878, with 109 students. One large structure, the present main building, was erected. It was numbered among Omaha's finest buildings.

Hard times struck the university later, but with the financial aid of John A. Creighton and numerous others in Omaha the institution has made great strides. To the main building has been added two others of equal size, while a large house library has been installed. During all these years no tuition has been charged.

The present astronomical observatory was built by Count John A. Creighton and fitted up by John A. McShane. Creighton university now boasts of five departments, with a total enrollment of over 1,000 pupils. Aside from the arts department the medical is the oldest. It was installed in 1882 at Twelfth and Mason streets, the old home of St. Joseph's hospital. Later this department was moved to the fine brick building at Fourteenth and Davenport streets. Subsequent to the addition of the medical department, colleges of law, pharmacy and dentistry were added. A post graduate course in higher English was added this year and a summer school will be installed next summer.

Drainage District Sued for Overflow

Charging that faulty construction of the Elkhorn valley drainage district ditches and Union Pacific railroad embankments near Waterloo caused the flooding of that town last spring, the Waterloo Seed company and the Citizens' State bank, both of Waterloo, have sued the drainage district and the railroad for damages in district court. The seed company asks $2,500 for seeds and grain destroyed by the flood; the bank wants $50 for damage to its building and fixtures and costs of repairs.
