Witness in International Case Cannot Recognize Agent's Signature.

SIGNED TO COERCIVE LETTER

Prosecution Produces Letter that Carries Stiff Attitude of Company Toward Agents for Harvester Machinery.

H. E. Daniels, general agent for the International Harvester company stationed at Council Bluffs, while on the witness stand in the alleged Harvester trust hearing refused to recognize as a policy of his company a letter introduced by the prosecution.

The letter bore the name of C. A. Claypool, general agent at Fort Dodge, Ia., and was written to G. G. Perrott, Earlington, Ia. Perrott is a blockman of the International at that place and is under the general agency of C. A. Claypool.

Daniels steadfastly refused to recognize the signature of the letter as that of Claypool. He said he had seen Claypool's signature once or twice but had no way of telling whether this was or was not his signature.

"This year we are going to insist more than ever before that those handling the McCormick and Deering lines shall carry the kindred lines."

He then asked Daniels to interpret the passages read. Daniels said he did not know what they meant.

Wednesday afternoon he testified that of the 28 customers the International has in the territory assigned to him, 29 of them handle one of the International binders. He also testified there were many large dealers in the territory who had no account with the International at all.

All the Klein whiskies are exclusive brands, while most of the wines, cordials, etc., handled here are direct imports. In fact, every item of Klein's vast stock is of the purest grade obtainable; the sort that carries the seal of goodness.

Residents of South Omaha will stake anything on the grade of goods obtained from Klein and every effort will be made to assure this same degree of satisfaction for patrons of Klein's newer Omaha establishment.
