HAVE SOME KIND OF PLAN

If You Are to Succeed in Life You Must Know What You Want.

TAKE A LESSON FROM A CHILD

Watch It Play and Sort Over Its Things and Go to End of Trouble to Achieve Some Result Longed For.

BY ADA PATTERSON.

A child at her mud-pie making is a living lesson for everyone who sees her at her pastime. Don't pass her with an indifferent glance nor a "Gracious, see how that naughty child is selling her dress!"

The little one, intent upon forming the black mass under her palm into something of form and plan, is in miniature the man or woman who is working life into a thing of use and beauty. It is not in either case an easy task, but watch the child and learn of her.

She bends her nose far above the black mass and ponders her we fore-hand into a network of lines. She is studying her material. We should study ours. The little one takes stock of the unpromising material. So should we. The child sees that the mud is slippery and that it needs some substance of firmer material to hold it in solid mass. She looks right and left, twists her little body about and at last sees what she needs. Some dry soil in a crevice of a rock. The small hand scoops it up in its hollow and places it beside her to await her need of it. We, finding a lack of the stout stuff of self-reliance and determination, should find and appropriate it. If in the planning of her pie she sees that the mixture will be too thick and heavy, she seeks a water filled hollow for its softening. If, surveying the character material from which life is made, find the materials crude and hard, we should seek that with which to soften it. Interest in some other human being or being than ourselves is the commodious remedy for that state.

Works Out Ideas.

As the little girl kneads and smoothes and pats you see that she is working after a pattern. She knows how large a pie she intends to make. "How big around" it will be, how thick it will be and whether it will be flat on top or slope from a glorious, curving, cake like summit. She knows what she wants to do and in that is superior to persons of larger size.

This morning a woman complaining of her dissatisfaction with life, told me she didn't know what she wanted. "Then you'd better find out," I said, "no one else knows if you don't." There are persons who are chronically dissatisfied. They throw the long shadow of their discontent over everyone who has the misfortune to know them and yet when they are asked what they want they don't know. They only know, or think they know, that they don't want what they have. The little girl has a plan, a pattern for her pie. How many of us have a plan, a pattern, for our lives. No one has ever done a piece of work well who did not have such plan or pattern.

We leave our beds in the morning uncertain what we will do that day. We follow this impulse and permit that whim to lead us. We start down one street, change our minds and hurry up another. We do what a friend tells us to do. We follow advice without weighing it. We tack to this wind and that. We live haphazard and work at random, thus wonder why life is a strange, cross-wise, incompletely, unsatisfying thing.

The child finds a gritty lump of sand in her mud pie, burrows for it with her chubby finger and throws it away. A "water-soaked chip disturbs the outline of the pie and she removes that and flings it into the road. A hard, unyielding lump of mud, resisting the coating of her finger cushions, she deems unworthy her pie and that, too, is discarded. We, finding unworthy motives, unyielding traits of character, in our characters, should cast them out. With the untaught wisdom of the child she eliminates that which is not worth while, or which is undesirable.

The child works with utmost patience. No trouble is too great, no time too long, for her pie making. And when the row of strange brown objects stands primly ready for baking there is the glow of triumph, the job of the finished work in her baby face. We tire of our tasks. We slight them or desert them, and we wonder why we are not accounted among the world's successes.

The child at her mud pies is exercising her constructive talent.

She is doing things. She is building, and all of life is building. Doing things as well as we can is the only excuse we can offer for living. Character is the stuff we mould into life as the child shapes her pies of mud.

WORK OF FROZEN WHISKY

How a Wreck in Zero Weather Spurred the Crew in Building a Trestle.

We were jogging along the Brazos bottoms in middle Texas. The train slowed down and crawled over a trestle that spanned a deep ravine.

"I remember that trestle well," remarked a gray-haired man in the smoker. "In fact, I worked on the wrecking crew that rebuilt it after a washout many years ago. We did the work on frozen whisky."

The men in the smoking compartment of the Pullman became interested. The gray-haired man lit a fresh cigar while the rest waited in silence.

"It was a freight wreck," continued the man. "There were two or three cars of whisky that were piled up at the bottom of the ravine. A few barrels were smashed, and the sand soaked up their contents before we arrived. The remainder of the shipment was undamaged. We rolled the barrels to one side. The weather was bitter cold—something very unusual for that part of Texas. Repairing the trestle was a long job, because timber had to be brought from a considerable distance.

"The second day I noticed that, despite the bitter weather, some of the wreckers were going about crunching ice. I asked one of them about it, and he nodded in the direction of the place where the whisky barrels were strewn over the ground. I went over at the first opportunity and found that the cold had caused some of the barrels to freeze and burst. The men had ripped off the staves and had chipped out some of the contents with their axes.

"I tried a piece of the ice and found it good. Some one said there was a lot of fever in the Brazos bottoms, and I tried some more. So did every one else. It heartened us up wonderfully, and from that time until the job was completed we worked like Trojans.

"One fellow with a brilliant mind built a fire and thawed out the whisky. We couldn't use any except from the burst barrels, but that would have been wasted if we hadn't. In fact, that trestle was built on frozen whisky."

"But say," exclaimed one of the listeners, "you can't freeze whisky. There's too much alcohol in it."

"Not in the kind they used to ship down

RELIGIOUS NOTES.

Rev. William Thomas Walsh, for years a member of the Paulist Fathers, has become rector of St. Mary's Episcopal church in New York.

New York is to have a spiritual temple to cost $250,000, to be built in Central park west.

A feature of the seventy-seventh anniversary exercises of the Eighteenth Street Methodist church of New York will be the attendance of Ernest H. Sluvey, who has been a member of the church seventy-three years and a trustee fifty-two years.

The gospels have been printed in Japan in three little known dialects for circulation among the aborigines of western China.

Rev. Nathan B. Sherman of Whittingham, Vt., aged 94 years, who is visiting his brother-in-law, Willis W. Burnett of Savoy, Mass., aged 90 years, traveled all the way from his home in Whittingham to Adams unaccompanied.

Rev. Franklin C. Simons of Williamsport, Pa., a mute preacher and mission-ary, gave an illustrated lecture to a number of deaf mutes by using the deaf and dumb alphabet he described pictures thrown on the screen. In order to enable the audience to see the lecture, a spotlight was turned upon him.
