MAY ESTABLISH NEW PARK

Three Lots at Sulphur Springs, Foot of Spencer Street, is Location.

WOULD MAKE AN IDEAL PLACE

Water is Said to Be of Medicinal Value and View from the Spot Extends Many Miles Along the Bluffs.

Police Commissioner Ryder has written W. B. Poppleton a letter in regard to the building of a city park on the three "sulphur spring" lots at the foot of Spencer street, one of which is owned by Poppleton. The commissioner suggests the lots be donated to the city by Poppleton and be known as "Poppleton Park" or "Poppleton View."

"These lots would make one of the finest bluff parks in the middle west," said Ryder, after the city commission had returned from a trip of inspection. "The sulphur springs there have been known for years among the pioneers as the fountain of youth," and their medicinal value is undisputed.

In addition to this there are several trees on the lots and the view is so fine one can almost see to the ends of the world. If the city can possibly secure these lots I would advise the creation of a park there."

These lots are now owned by three residents. Poppleton owns one of them, and because he has been one of the prime factors in the city's growth since the early days the commissioners may, if the park is built there, name it for him. The owners of the three lots now hold the land at $1,000 a lot. "Uncle" Joe Redman was first to suggest a park at this place.

White Wife Gives Ethical Lesson to Her Negro Husband

Percy G. Hughes, colored, living at 111 North Ninth street, swore an oath by the sacred beard of his forefathers that ere the sun peaked above the eastern horizon again he would secure his six-shooter from a nearby pawnshop and shoot six separate and distinct holes in the physical being of his white wife, Minnie.

After all of this he drew his trusty pocket knife and attempted to insert a mark of identification on his spouse so that he would recognize her on his return. She objected, however, and disarmed him. During the struggle which ensued, Percy was slightly cut.

Minnie rushed to the station after his departure and soon had the law on him. He was fined $10 and costs by Judge Britt.
