WEATHER PROVERBS O. K.'D

Semi-Official Vindication for Ancient Weather Lore.

SOME SIGNS ARE SURE THINGS

Ambitious "Prophets" Given Expert Advice in Forecasting Changes in Meteorological Conditions.

The weather prophet, who, up to the time of the establishment of the United States weather bureau, could be found in every town and village of the country and who was known by his ability to tell what kind of weather to expect on the morrow, has received "vindication" at the hands of the Department of Agriculture. The meteorological experts of this department declare that those of us who laughed at the predictions of these weather "seers" have done them an injustice. They further declare there are certain signs to be seen about the sun, moon, stars, and even in the wind, which can be counted upon to foretell changes in meteorological conditions.

In speaking of the old weather prophets and these signs, the men at the weather bureau in Washington say that a prophet not only can recognize these signs at a glance, but that he has a weather proverb at hand to interpret them with. For instance, the fisherman today, as in the past, will weigh anchor and flee from a gathering storm when to the uninitiated there is no indication of anything other than continued fair weather. This fisherman has noted some small cloud upon the horizon, and, recalling one of his well known proverbs, he at once knows that bad weather is on its way.

"The coming season" is very important to the farmer of the country, for upon the weather it will bring forth depends his livelihood. If he knew what to expect during the coming season he would be able to tell what crops to plant and where; whether upon hill or lowland, in light or heavy soil, and when best to cultivate them—vital points for his success. There are certain proverbs that are used to help tell what the coming season may be. For instance:

Year of snow, Fruit will grow.

A year of snow, a year of plenty.

Self evident truths. That these and similar proverbs are often true is evident from the fact that a more or less continuous covering of snow, incident of a cold winter, not only delays the blossoming of fruit trees till after the probable season of killing frosts, but also prevents the alternate thawing and freezing and ruinous to wheat and other grains. Some other proverbs concerning seasons are:

A late spring never deceives. January warm, the Lord have mercy.

If you see grass in January, Lock your grain in your granary.

January blossoms fill no man's cellar. January and February Do fill or empty the granary.

"A red sun has water in his eye" is a familiar proverb that belongs to the class which has to do with the sun. This is a weather proverb that contains a good deal of truth, for the condition that most favors a red sun is a dark quantity of dust in a damp atmosphere. A red sun, therefore, says the weather bureau experts, commonly indicates the presence of both the essential rain elements—that is, dust and moisture. Here is another red sun weather proverb:

If red sun begin his race, He sure the rain will make.

There are many proverbs, ranging from the good and useful to the misleading and absurd, concerning the color of the sky at sunrise and sunset. In many ways the most interesting of all of them is that which, according to Matthew, Christ used to answer to the Pharisees and Sadducees, when they asked that He would show them a sign from heaven. It is as follows:

"He answered and said upon them. When it is evening, ye say. It will be fair weather; for the sky is red.

"And in the morning. It will be foul weather today; for the sky is red and lowering."

Then there is the well known proverb taken from Shakespeare:

A red morn that ever yet betokened Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the fish.

Sorrow to the Shepherd, woe unto the birds.

Quips and foul flaws to herdsmen and to the best of the flock.

Other proverbs of this class are as follows:

Red in the morning is a sailor's warning; Sky red at night, is the sailor's delight.

The weary sun hath made a golden set. And by the bright track of the fiery car Gives token of a goodly day tomorrow.

If the sun set in gray, The next will be a rainy day.

If the sun goes pale to bed 'Twill rain tomorrow, it is said.

Evening gray and morning red Make the shepherd hang his head.

An evening gray and a morning red Will send the shepherd wet to bed.

Evening red and morning gray Two sure signs of one fine day.

Evening red and morning gray Help the traveler on his way; Morning gray and morning red Sun and moon signs Bring down rain upon his head.

Many proverbs foretelling rain and bad weather are based on the appearance of solar and lunar halos and coronas, and as these form only when there is much moisture in the air, and some condensation, the proverbs of this class are well founded. Coronas are the small colored rings of light that encircle any bright object when seen through a mist, though the term is used to designate only the colored rings around the sun and moon.

Typical of such proverbs is that of the Tamil Indians, who say:

"When the sun is in his house it will rain soon."

Some of the others refer to the apparent diameter of the circle. For instance:

Far bur, near rain. The bigger the ring, the nearer the wet. When the wheel is far the storm is near.

When the wheel is near the storm is far. The sun, moon and stars have furnished any number of useful weather proverbs. Some of them are as follows:

Clear moon, Frost soon.

Moonlit nights have the heaviest frosts.

The moon and the weather May chase together. Does not change the moon.

If we'd see moon at all, And that may seem strange, We still should have weather That's subject to change.

Sharp horns do threaten windy weather. When the stars begin to huddle,

Your credit is good

The earth will soon become a puddle.

When stars flicker in a dark background rain or snow follows soon.

There are numerous proverbs based on the direction and changes of the wind.

Here are a few of them:

When the smoke goes west, Guide weather is past.

When the smoke goes east, Gude weather comes next.

When the wind's in the south, The rain's in its mouth.

The wind in the west Suits everyone best.

Some weather proverbs based upon the shapes, etc., of the clouds are as follows:

The higher the clouds the finer the weather.

Mackerel scales and mare's tails, Make lorry ships carry low sails.

When the clouds appear like rocks and towers, The earth's refreshed by frequent showers.

When the clouds are upon the hills, They'll come down by the rills.

Not only seeing, but hearing, as well, has its appropriate proverbs. One based upon sound is as follows:

Sound traveling far and wide A stormy day will betide.

One based upon seeing is:

The farther the sight the nearer the rain.

There is any number of weather proverbs, but those quoted here are considered by the weather bureau officials as the most useful. If you have ambitions to be a prophet, learn the proverbs here given, apply them to the signs you may see, and you have the guarantee of the meteorological experts of Uncle Sam that you will not be far wrong in your predictions.—Brooklyn Eagle.

STORK GIFTS CAUSE WONDER

Some Remarks of Little Boys and Girls on Arrival of Stork.

If the little stranger fills the parents with joy, its reception by brothers wants the warmth of welcome given by the sisters. The girls hang around the little cherub with a reluctance of wondering delight, but the boys are apt to express their feelings in terms of the little chap who exclaimed: "I'd much rather it had been a parrot."

PLACE OF SUN WORSHIPERS

Ruins of Cuzco, Ancient City of Incas, Show Queer Capital of Today.

The ancient city of Cuzco, when first viewed by European eyes, was, according to the best authorities, a great and wealthy municipality of perhaps 200,000 souls. How old it was at that time we have scant means of knowing.

It would have of believe that there were only thirteen Incas in the royal line from Manco Capac to Huayna Capac; Montezinos, on the other hand, assures us that the Incas ruled for a thousand years.

Which are we to believe? No written history of the race exists—only the records of the quipus, those queer knotted strings that were the Incas' sole documents and for which no archaeologist has as yet discovered the key, the Rosetta stone.

Cuzco's original plan was, singularly enough, that of the Roman camp, a quadrangle divided by two intersecting streets into quarters, with a gate on each face and towers at the angles. Ramusio gives an interesting wood cut of the city as it appeared to the conquerors.

The Incas, like the citizens of the United States, had no more definite name for their country than Tawantinsuyu, the

WHALE RAMS OCEAN LINER

Collision Shakes Steamship Fore and Aft, and Finishes the Whale.

The Austro-American liner Kaiser Franz Josef came into the port of New York Saturday with a large number of passengers, much cargo and a story of a whale of great proportions which tried to butt the bottom out of the big liner and died in the attempt.

The Kaiser Franz Josef was shaken to such an extent that the skipper, all of his junior officers, half of the crew and scores of the passengers rushed on deck in apprehension.

Not until the dead body of the giant mammal was seen floating away to windward did the skipper and his men know what had been under them.

The account of the whale is touched for by no less an authority than Gustav Millmott, the first officer of the Kaiser Franz Josef, who at the time of the commotion happened to be entering on the log the fact that the big liner was at that
