The committee on statistics of the Naional Board of Fire Underwriters has just submitted its annual report on the fire losses in the United States and some foreign countries for the calendar year, 1912. From an abstract of the report pp. pearing in the quarterly of the National Fire Protection association, July last, the following table of losses in cities of over 20,000 population has been taken;

No. of cities Inited States... ingland ... France 3,485,583 2,668,978 967,372 1,428,042

*Estimated per capita loss for country, $2.16. It will be noted that the United States continues to lead the old world in the per capita loss; it should also be noted that Canada's large cities lead those of this country by 12% and that one city in Argentina, presumably Buenos Aires, has the high per capita record, $3.58.

An almost unbelieveable record in the report is that from Dresden to Germany, a city of 561,000 people, with a total fire loss in 1912 of $16,800 or only 3c. per
