We have Arranged for Tomorrow--Monday--a Magnificent Display and Sale of Women's and Misses' FINE WEARING APPAREL

WE HAVE had our initial opening. We displayed for your benefit and approval many exclusive and novel new styles, demonstrating them to you on professional living models and showing you how they look when worn. Among them was the much-talked-of Tango Gown with its flimsy chiffon pantaloons (shown for the first time west of Chicago) as well as the Sultana Turkish Pantaloons Skirt, which is creating such a sensation in the east. The display was pronounced by hundreds who viewed it as an authentic style revelation—a most dignified and refined assemblage of all that is new in Women's Wearing Apparel. For Monday we have arranged a special display and sale which will give you who prefer buying your garments early an opportunity to make your selection now.

Having looked through this first showing of beautiful apparel you will understand why the garments are being selected so rapidly. Each one is smart, charming in style, possessing both individuality and simplicity and with its original freshness—a point we emphasize on our apparel throughout the season. An early selection means the choicest fabrics which are scarce even now, and this condition will become more general as the fall advances.

RICHES COME FROM FARMS

Still adhering to his frequently expressed belief that the prosperity of the nation rests upon the efficiency of the farmer and the success of his crops, former Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson, who is in Washington on his way home to Iowa, after a tour to study farm conditions in the British Isles, stated last night that the only chance he can see of a hard business year lies in the possibility of radical changes in the tariff affecting agricultural products and disturbing the markets of the American farmer.

thing but another prosperous year when I left two months ago," said Mr. Wilson, "and I don't think the situation is any different now. The crops are good, and despite the drought in the southwest, I think the farmers will come out all right. The only thing which can interfere with their success is the possibility of violent changes in the laws."

The former secretary was sent abroad by his state for the purpose of studying the farm-renting system with a view to instituting a system in Iowa which will protect the soil of Iowa farms under rental, comprising 25 per cent of the farm lands in the state, from being impoverished by tenants who have no object but to extract all they can from the land and move away without doing anything to maintain the productive qualities of the soil. The British government's plan of buying large agricultural holdings and selling them in small farms on easy terms is working out satisfactorily, according to Mr. Wilson, but there has arisen a serious problem in the increasing scarcity of farm laborers. Canada and Australia are doing a great amount of advertising in Great Britain, and the result is a steady exodus of farm workers to those countries. Mr. Wilson encountered a situation in his native Scotland which caused him to protest at first, but which now brings chuckles. At several hotels he found menus printed in French, and German waiters who couldn't read the menus. After futile negotiations for a bowl of oatmeal or some other favorite dish, he would give up in despair and resort to "bring me something to eat," with results that were frequently a tax on his digestion and good nature.—Washington Post.
