

FAKE REPORTS UNDER BAN

National Commission Says Players May Write if They Wish.

WILL FURNISH STENOGRAPHERS

Copy of Each Account Must Be Filed with Commission—Move to Protect the Public and the Game.

CHICAGO, Oct. 3.—Base ball players who will write their own newspaper stories of the world's or other post-season series may do so with the approval of the national commission, President Johnson of the American league said last night on his return from a brief vacation in Michigan.

He did not favor the suggestion reported to have been made by Chairman Herrmann of the commission to call off the world's series in case players permitted the misuse of their names.

"The purpose of the commission is not to prevent players' earning extra money in any legitimate way," said President Johnson, "but to stop the faking, which is bound to do base ball a serious injury unless it is curbed. In the public's mind the great pitcher who will accept money for the use of his name in connection with stories he does not write would be just as likely to accept money to throw a base ball game."

"If any player wants to write both side articles for a newspaper during the world's series let him go to the headquarters of the national commission after the game. We will furnish an expert stenographer, to whom he can dictate his story. The typist will take two copies, one of which the player can send to the paper, the other we will keep for the commission."

"If the paper publishes the story as the player prepares it there will be no objection. This, I think, is a fair challenge to the players, and it will protect the public. I do not believe that one ball player in 100 can write stories which newspapers will want to print or which patrons will care to read."

May Be Last World's Series.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—This year's may be the last to see a world's series according to base ball gossip here. In many quarters agitation for the abandonment of a world's series each fall and the substitution of an inter-league post-season series in which all of the sixteen major league clubs could share has been going on for some time and according to the reports here at least one of the three members of the National Commission has suggested it may be feasible to do away with the world's series after this year. It is said that August Herrmann, chairman of the commission and owner of the Cincinnati club, has broached the idea with a plan that the regular seasons be reduced to 112 games in each league to be followed by an inter-league schedule of sixty-four games, in which each National league team would play four games at home and four abroad with each American league team. The total winnings percentage for the two schedules might determine the title of world's champion.

The present wrangle between members of the New York and Philadelphia teams which would be parties to the championship fight this year, and in the National Commission because of the rule prohibiting series players from writing or allowing their use of their names over newspaper stories has given impetus to the argument for the abandonment of the big series after this year. Those arguing for such action point out that out of sixteen major league clubs only four have shared in the world's series spoils since 1905.
