TALK TO GERMAN-AMERICANS
Tell of the Influence of Textile and Clothing Manufacturing

ALFRED G. MEYER at ST. LOUIS
Centennial of German-American Friendship — A Chrysler Exhibit

LOUIS, Oct. 1 — The influence of the German upon the American textile and clothing industry, with special reference to the development of the St. Louis trade, was told at a recent exhibition of the German-American Chamber of Commerce of St. Louis.

There is no question about the fact that the American textile industry has been largely dominated by the German, particularly in the Mueller era. The German influence is noticeable in every branch of the industry. From the beginning, the German has been the leader in the industry, and his influence has been felt in every phase of it.

The exhibit contained a large collection of clothing and textiles, all of which were made by German-Americans. The clothing was of various kinds and types, ranging from the simple homespun to the most elaborate and expensive. The textiles were also of various kinds and types, ranging from the coarse and coarsest to the finest and most delicate.

The exhibit was opened to the public on October 1st, and it is expected to continue for several weeks. The exhibit is located in the German-American Chamber of Commerce Building, at the corner of Fourth and Market streets.

Five Hundred Are Homeless at Nome
Three Bodies Found

Near Nome, Oct. 1 — Five hundred young men and women are homeless in Nome, and three bodies have been found within the past two days. The bodies were found in the city and have been identified as those of the victims of the Nome fire of October 1st.

The bodies were found near the site of the fire, which was thought to be caused by a lightning strike. The fire swept through the city, destroying nearly all of the buildings. The bodies were identified as those of the victims of the fire.

The bodies were taken to the Nome City Morgue for identification. The cause of death is thought to be asphyxiation due to the smoke and heat of the fire.
