Mrs. Mary Simonsen, 1836 North Twenty-second street, wife of Detlef Simonsen, employed by the Metz Brewing company, gave birth to a nine-pound boy Friday, October 10, which, coincidentally, is the birthday of the mother and the grandmother of the lad.

HEARING IS HAD ON DISTANCE TARIFF RATES

Omaha railroad freight men who were at Lincoln before the Railway commission listening to testimony given for and against the proposition of putting a distance tariff into effect are of the opinion that the opponents of the plan made a strong showing.

Jobbers from all of the cities of the state, say the railroad men, gave testimony, showing that while the distance tariff would not bring about a radical reduction of freight rates in favor of any particular point, it would result in destroying all of the jobbing centers ultimately bringing about small wholesale establishments in all of the towns of the state, each with a limited territory.

Drives Wall of Well Down as the Bottom of Soil is Dug Away

An innovation in the form of well digging has been introduced to Omaha by John Ricketts, who is sinking a well for the Evans Model Steam laundry. Instead of digging the well and then building the wall Ricketts is building the wall first and then allowing it to sink into the earth.

The well is being dug to furnish the laundry with water with which to clean the clothes. It will sink about seventy feet into the ground to bed rock, when it will be impossible to go dry. The first thirty feet of the wall will be thirteen inches and the remaining forty feet will be eight inches. About fifty feet of part will be dug already, but the hardest part will be in digging the other fifteen feet.

The wall is constructed on a circular steel shoe that is built like a wedge. Guide posts are run down the side to keep the well straight and the wedges of the shoe cut about a foot wider than the wall in order to prevent sticking. However, several times the wall sticks when water surges to the surface, and it is necessary to keep a thirty-horse power six-foot cylinder pump going all the time. Even then the mud which surges up with the water clogs the pump and makes it necessary to take the cylinder apart and clean it of the mud. It is a tedious process to clean the pump and this delays the work considerably.

Water was struck at twenty feet, and ever since the digging has been a very slow process. The well is stuck at present and Ricketts is using jacks to force the wall down. According to Manager Segrist of the laundry the wall will be forced to bedrock if they are compelled to lift the building with the jackscrews.

When the well is installed water can be pumped into the laundry for about 3 or 4 cents per 1,000 gallons. The expense will be less, however, as the steam that drives the pump will be used to dry the clothes. The water is more preferable to city water, as it is clear and clean after sifting through the 200 or 300 feet of quicksand that lies between the level of the water and bedrock.

A Letter and Answer

OMAHA, Oct. 10.—To the Editor of The Bee: In last night's Bee I noticed an editorial article entitled "What Omaha Needs," in which you make some very serious general charges against the Omaha bar and close the editorial with the following:

"There ought to be manhood and courage enough among the decent members of the bar and backbone enough in the judges on the bench to do a first-class cleanup job, and do it before the job gets any bigger." Permit me as president of the Omaha Bar association to request of you specific charges, with names and incidents, and I will assure you that the Bar association will not hesitate to take up the matter and investigate fully through its appropriate committees.

The quarterly meeting of the Bar association occurs tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. I should be pleased to have your response in time to present at that meeting.

T. W. BLACKBURN, President Omaha Bar Association.

The Bee respectfully refers the president of the Omaha Bar association to Mr. Francis A. Brogan, who has served upon investigating committees, which have more than once, so we are told, brought in recommendations against members of the bar charged with unprofessional practices, none of which recommendations, so far as we know, have ever resulted in disbarment. Mr. Brogan has recently declared he would not serve again on any such committee because the labor is fruitless. If the Bar association will take up these cases and disbar one or two members The Bee might feel justified in furnishing some names.

New Alamito Plant to Have Glass Front

Charles F. Schwager, president of the Alamito Dairy company, has returned from an eastern trip of three weeks, where he inspected some of the most up-to-date pasteurizing milk plants in the country. Mr. Schwager says he finds that all the big companies of the country are now pasteurizing their milk and that after July 1 of next year it will be compulsory at Philadelphia.

Mr. Schwager says that he has picked up many new ideas for his new plant which is to be constructed at Twenty-sixth and Leavenworth streets, on the southwest corner, having visited several plants of great magnitude now under construction, where the latest devices are being installed. He says that health authorities are insisting more and more upon pasteurization and that sooner or later it will be the rule of all the larger cities.

"We have decided to do all our work in the open where the public may watch all our processes and to that end will have a full glass front, where those passing the plant may see just what is done at all times," said Mr. Schwager. "This is the most advanced idea in business and but one other of which I have knowledge is now doing this."
