$19.50

OUR entire stock of high class Suits is included. Not a single garment reserved. A positive and determined clearance effort. None sent on approval.

SALE STARTS MONDAY MORNING PROMPTLY at 8:30

AN annual event with a new feature. It's this differentness of doing things that has brought this ready-to-wear section so prominently before the buying public and helped to make it the largest department of its kind in the central west. Always doing something that redounds to the benefit of its patrons. In this annual choice-of-the-house sale we have added this new feature—the first time to our knowledge it has been used by any store. This is it: Each succeeding day of the sale after Monday the price will be lowered $1.00; in other words, Tuesday's price will be choice of the house for $18.50; Wednesday your choice for $17.50, Thursday your choice $16.50, and so on until the entire stock is disposed of. Can you think of anything more liberal?

The Materials—

ARE the very finest including such splendid weaves, as imported serges, broadcloths, sponges, diagonals, duvetyns, fancy weaves, poplins, Bedford cords, corduroys, velvets, etc., etc., in all the most favored colorings.

The Styles—

Any Trimmed HAT

In the House Marked $10 or Over, $5

SOMETHING different, always something different, can be found in Orkin's millinery, something new every day, different styles than those you see elsewhere. So many remarks have been passed of late upon the great difference in styles to be found at Orkin's, and the reason is we are constantly in touch with the greatest millinery house in America, and that means we are constantly bringing out new ideas, and every day sees new millinery in our show room. For Monday we continue that successful sale of Any Trimmed Hat in the house marked $10 or over at $5.

UNCLE SAM'S STOCK OF MAPS
Remarkable Collection Occupies Quarters in Congressional Library.
What is not only the largest but also the most remarkable collection of maps in the world is owned by the United States Government and cared for in the Congressional Library. To the wing set apart for their preservation come the most eminent of geographers, and here Commander Peary, discoverer of the North pole, has done some of his scientific research. All told, there are about 30,000 maps in the collection. One room has huge atlases piled tier upon tier from the floor to the roof; old-fashioned ones dating from the beginning of atlas making to the up-to-date creations of the binder's art. An expert is kept continually at work mounting maps, for many that are purchased are in a dilapidated condition and must be mounted or "backed" on linen of the newest and strongest texture. The market from which they are produced covers the world. From Greenland to India, from China to Patagonia, maps are gathered, and the older they are the more they are valued. One map of China is printed with the odd designs of rivers, mountains, trees and men in a jumble of which the American mind can make nothing, but possibly to a Celestial it is perfectly clear. Among the most interesting and most precious are early maps, some of them dated prior to the discovery of America. One of these is a hand-colored affair made in 1482, just ten years before Columbus discovered the new world. A map made by Cosa, a companion of Columbus, and dated 1500, shows an odd-looking continent meant to represent America. There are rude drawings scattered about on this queer picture, most of them attempts to draw dwellings and people of strange aspect. In 1528 a map of the new world was engraved for the first time and its grotesque outlines seem pitifully childish under the glass of the handsome case in which it reposes. By its side is perhaps the queerest of all maps, a powder-born, on which a map is etched in brown, while not far off is a map made by one of the famous pirates of that day, a

Captain Bart, who probably used it in his buccanering expeditions after Spanish gold. A map dated 1571 shows America as consisting of Florida mostly, while Virginia occupies the rest of the continent almost exclusively. One of England in the time of Queen Elizabeth and made by Saxton is shown in a fine state of preservation. Of revolutionary maps there are several dozen, representing different states or the location of troops at a particular time. To this period belongs a most interesting relic of Washington, which is a survey of one of his own farms, every field being accurately drawn to scale and the number of acres it contained written clearly at the top. The freak maps attract the most attention from the visitor. They are ranged in a case containing about ten queer specimens of the map-making art, and all are modern. Perhaps the most ludicrous of these is a drawing representing "All the World Watchdog," showing the outlines of all the nations fashioned into faces, but the characteristic of each country shows in its countenance, and the correct geographical lines are given.

Brazil, the United States, England, Spain, Portugal, Norway and Sweden are so drawn that their ocean line forms a human face, with the eyes watching sharply.—Washington Star.
