NOW AN OFFICER IN THE NAVY

Lieut. McGuire Here After an Absence of Five Years.

IN CHINA AT THE UPRISING

Given an Opportunity to Witness Battles Between the Imperialists and Rebels and See Heads Cut Off.

Henry D. McGuire, who left the Omaha High school, entered the United States naval academy, became an officer in the navy and was given two promotions, is in Omaha for the first time in five years. He is on a three month's leave of absence. He has been in the service five years, three years as a midshipman, two years as an ensign and has been a junior lieutenant since last summer, when he successfully passed a ten-day examination for promotion.

Lieutenant McGuire relates some experiences as an officer in the Pacific and the Asiatic squadron. He was on the cruiser Albany when it traversed the waters of the Yang-tze-Kiang river during the Chinese revolution in 1911 and 1912. The Albany was the first American vessel to be sent to China. Lieutenant McGuire saw considerable fighting, or at least what the Chinese call fighting.

"We went from Manila, where we were stationed when we learned that China was in a state of uprising and that American residents were in jeopardy. We went direct to Shanghai, and when we arrived found the rebels preparing to take the city. Formal notice had been given that Manchu City would be burned, and the notice was carried out, but in a most extraordinary manner," he said. "The rebels burned the total's women to the ground. The total's is the mayor of the Chinese city and the women is his dwelling. This was a great victory from the Chinese standpoint, but from our conception it was merely unnecessary destruction of property. The capture of Manchu City was, of course, a disappointment to us, for we were anxious to see warfare as it is popularly supposed to be conducted.

"From Shanghai we went up the river to Woosung and were surprised to find that the forts were flying rebel flags. The forts had been captured just as we arrived, but it was a very quiet performance.

"Three days later we sailed for Amoy. That city was still imperial and all was quiet. The high Chinese officials were gone and the government in the hands of foreigners. The emperor had invited the viceroy of Amoy to loan him 1,000,000 taels, which invitation the viceroy did not receive favorably, and on consideration of the pros and cons, he lost his nerve and departed for parts unknown.

"We then sailed for Nanking, where conditions were unsettled and both imperialists and rebels appeared to be very bellicose. On the night of November 25 Tiger Hill was very mysteriously captured by the rebels. From our previous observations of the warfare we decided that the rest of the forts would also be captured without the firing of more than half a dozen shots. But we were mistaken, for Sunday morning the rebels decided to burn a little surplus powder. Both sides began firing. During the engagement the crew of the Albany manned the rails and rigging and shouted encouragements to both sides.

One Head Chopped Off.
"The next day the Chinese servant of the American consul came on board and announced that the battle would commence once more. All was quiet until 2:15, when both sides started firing. During the firing imperial soldiers chopped off the head of a prisoner. The day after Thanksgiving terms of surrender were arranged. Saturday morning white flags appeared and the city was taken by the rebels. General Shun had made his escape in the meantime and was several miles away by daybreak.

"We then learned something of Chinese discipline. We were told that General Chang Shun beheaded over 700 people in Nanking. He is said to have decapitated his own gunners when they failed in marksmanship.

"When the rebels got control they issued this order: 'The following are liable to decapitation: Those who shrink in battle; those who conceal munitions of war; those who attack property; those who kill the innocent; those who receive and entertain Manchu slaves; those who spy for the enemy; those who embarrass foreigners; those who misrepresent military circumstances; and those who mislead the public by fabrications.'

Besides his Chinese experience, Lieutenant McGuire visited nearly all the eastern islands with which America has any connection, and he visited several Central American republics. He spent several weeks in Japan, too.

MISS O'REILLY LECTURES HERE ON IRISH ART

Miss Gertrude O'Reilly, recently of Dublin, Ireland, gave an illustrated lecture on Irish art at the Young Women's Christian association on Friday evening. It was under the auspices of the Omaha Society of Fine Arts, and proved to be a most interesting occasion.
