On the violet use as a spray weak whale-oil soap solution.

Spring-tails—These are of microscopic size, and unfamiliar to most people. Their most distinctive characteristic is the possession of a forked "spring" by means of which they leap long distances when disturbed. They feed on the tissues of young seedlings just as they come through the ground. Remedy: Sprinkle the soil with lime-water, made by slaking five pounds of lime in three gallons of water. Let it stand and use the clear portion from the top.

Cockroach—Large flat-bodied insects. They are night feeders hiding in crevices during the day. Very destructive to young plants in the spring. Remedy: Trap with sweetened bran poisoned with Paris green and sprinkle powdered borax about the affected plants.

Thrips—Very small insects with long slender bodies, and four poorly developed wings. When disturbed they thrust the body into the air as if they meant to sting. They are common on melons, cucumbers and tomatoes. Remedy: Tobacco smoke; fumigating (indoors) with potassium cyanide.

Tarnished plant bug—Small bugs varying from a dull brown to a greenish yellow. Yellow head, with three narrow reddish stripes. Common on chrysanthemums outdoors. They suck the juices from the leaves and buds and thus destroy the flowers. Remedy: Spray with kerosene emulsion.

Four-lines leaf bug—This is a bright yellow bug about a quarter of an inch long. There are four stripes extending over the pro-thorax and wing-covers. Often found on outdoor plants. Remedy: Spray with kerosene emulsion. (Get it from the seedsman.)

Mealy bug—These are the most common and noxious of house plant pests, especially in the greenhouse and conservatory. Every one is familiar with the waxy-white secretion in which they envelop themselves while at work on the plants, under which are found soft-bodied insects one-eighth of an inch long. Remedy: Apply kerosene emulsion with a spray or brush.

Orthesia—Similar to the mealy bug in many respects, and the treatment is the same.

Lecanium—Soft scales which occur upon most all plants indoors and out, sometimes called "brown-scale." Remedy: Spray with whale-oil soap solution, and remove from large, broad-leaved plants, such as palms, with a stiff brush.

Aphides—Commonly called plant-lice or green-fly. They are small pear-shaped, soft-bodied insects—winged and wingless. Remedy: Indoors, tobacco smoke. Greenhouses should be fumigated weekly. Outdoors, spray with whale-oil soap solution or kerosene emulsion.

Leaf-tier; Leaf-roller—Caterpillars, which affect plants and trees, being very destructive to roses and apples. They wrap themselves in the leaves by making cocoons. Remedy: Hand picking and Paris green sprays.

Rose-bugs—The insects which burrow into the heart of the rose blooms, spoiling them for use. There is no remedy for them which will not also disfigure the rose. Pick them by hand, as they are easily caught.

Diseases of the garden may be grouped under the different remedies, as many of them have the same remedy.

Rust, Anthracnose, Blight, Leaf-spot, Downy-mildew, Will, Rose-rust, Stem-rot—These are all bacterial diseases of plants, affecting the asparagus, bean, strawberry, cabbage-family, celery, corn, cucumber, potato, tomato, melons and many flowers, such as the carnation, chrysanthemum, rose and violet. Remedy: The remedy is to watch for the first appearance of diseased tissue, and at once apply standard Bordeaux mixture several times, and remove all diseased foliage and burn it.
