CHIVALRY OR THE SUFFRAGE

Woman's Right to Vote Brings Out Some "New" Features.

DEBATE BEFORE MOOSE CLUB

Mrs. Munson of Kansas and Lawyers St. Clair and Morgan Hook Up in a Battle of Words.

Edgar L. Bradley ducked his obligations last night and fled to St. Louis instead of staying to debate the suffrage question with Mrs. M. E. Munson, state organizer of the suffragists of Kansas, at Moose club hall. He left a note saying he had to go to St. Louis.
So two brave men were drafted to take his place. They were J. H. St. Clair and Kelso Morgan, two lawyers at that. Mrs. Munson insisted there was only one point in the question and that was, "Is woman suffrage right?" If it is right, she declared then it is not a question whether it is expedient. Contrary to the reports that have been circulated she declared the women in Colorado had done great good with the franchise, in that they are responsible for the joint guardianship law in that state, the law making parents responsible for the delinquency of their children, the law of compulsory education, the law raising the age of protection of girls to 15, the law creating a state industrial school, and other good laws.
Then St. Clair talked about his good old mother who raised six sons who had made the world a better place to live in, and he felt that mother had exercised a brand of suffrage better than any that is being asked for now. Then he was sure women didn't want to vote. He was afraid the ballot for women would kill the spark of chivalry in men. The same fear was felt by many in the room, for many applauded his remarks.
Kelso Morgan was strong for chivalry and was applauded by a crowd of 100 chivalrous men.
Mrs. Munson said she did not exactly know what chivalry was, but she thought it meant a man's willingness to pick up a woman's handkerchief in the parlor. She had noticed, too, that when a widow was left with considerable property there were always a lot of chivalrous men around who wanted to help her handle it.
Out in the lobby while the debate was in progress one man stood pushing his baby buggy back and forth, back and forth, while his wife sat serenely within listening to the debate. Another husky man bounced his 18-month-old daughter up and down, and up and down on his knee to keep her quiet while his wife sat within applauding Mrs. Munson.
