COUNCIL THROWS OUT BIDS

All Bids for Installing City Hall Heating Plant Rejected.

HE WOULD NOT NAME STOKER

City Would Not Accept Hanighen's Bid When He Refuses to Specify the Kind of Stoker He Would Use.

All bids for installing a heating plant in the city hall were rejected by the city commissioners by a vote of four to three, C. H. Withnell voting in the negative and Commissioners A. C. Kugel and J. J. Ryder being absent. This action followed the refusal of the low bidder, John J. Hanighen, to specify in writing the kind of a stoker he would install if awarded the contract.

Mr. Hanighen in a letter to the council said he would be seriously handicapped if the council forced him to name the stoker he intended to use. He said he was planning to receive competitive bids. The bidder, specifications say, the Jones stoker, or one equally as good, shall be installed. The Jones stoker is one of the highest priced on the market.

Do Not Award Contract. Commissioner Dan B. Butler refused to vote for a motion to award the contract to Hanighen and, after a prolonged discussion three other commissioners—McGovern, Hummel and the mayor—voted with him to reject the bids.

Commissioner Withnell, after the bids had been rejected, said: "You might as well award the contract to the Bee Building company now."

"I'm willing," said Commissioner Butler. "The matter was not discussed, however. The city clerk has not been instructed to readvertise for bids."

The proposition of the Bee Building company is to furnish heat to the city hall for $2,450 a year, which would mean a substantial saving to the taxpayers. Hanighen's bid is $12,750.

Dr. John Herman Wallace of Omaha was elected president of the National Association of Dental Examiners at its national convention in Rochester, N. Y., yesterday. The news came to Omaha by dispatch and was the occasion for much rejoicing among professional and other friends of Dr. Wallace.
