

ENGLISH SOLDIERS AWAIT THEIR DAY

Wonderful as is Advance of Tenth Host, Retirement of Allies Equally Magnificent.

NO HOLDING SUCH MASS OF MEN

However Great Slaughter of Advance Lines of Germans, Always Fresh Troops Behind to Fill Gaps.

By R. M. TOMLINSON. Correspondent of the World and the London Daily News.

(Copyright, 1914, Press Publishing Co.) GOURNAY, Near Rouen, Wednesday Night, Via London, Sept. 4.—(Special Cablegram to New York World and Omaha Bee.)—I talked today with a non-commissioned officer belonging to a regiment named after an eastern county of England, who had been at the front fighting the last ten days, almost continuously night and day. And very hard fighting, too.

"Our only rest was when we were on the march retiring," he said. "The German attack is certainly extraordinary. You can throw them down and mow them down, but still they come on, and directly the gaps are made in their ranks fresh men fill them up. There seems to be an inexhaustible supply of fresh troops. It is impossible to oppose successfully such a mass of men."

Allied Troops Confident. But still from my observation and my talks with men and officers, there need be no concern in England about the enthusiasm and confidence and good spirits of both the British and the French in France. They do not minimize in any way the power of the enemy, but it is strange that the rapid and irresistible rush of the Germans, which in England may appear intensely alarming, does not worry the French or the British soldiers. They believe themselves well placed and are surprisingly quiet and confident, and are patiently working away and watching and waiting for their day, which is to come. Nothing that has yet happened in the campaign has made any of them in the least despondent.

When the history of this war is written it will be seen that wonderful as has been the German advance, the retirement of the allied forces has been equally magnificent. It is hardly possible to understand why such reckless masses of men and guns (and it is believed that nearly all the German army is in France), and directly the gaps are made in their ranks fresh men fill them up, should not overwhelm every human force, however well armed and skillfully handled, which stands before it.

It looks to me from all the evidence I can gather that if the Germans have the weight, the allies certainly have the steadiness and science. These, with reinforcements of troops, will eventually win.

From what I heard of the progress of the German advance up till last Saturday I judged it would be useful to visit the little town of (censored) down the road. Waiting for Germans. I found a peaceful countryside as though it had never heard of war. The sight of a strangely beautiful cathedral standing apart from the town was restful enough, but there was something uncanny about the shut and silent houses. Not an inhabitant was to be seen, and the air cold and still struck us that the town had been evacuated.

This corresponding with the feeling of the people, although deep rooted sympathies are felt for England."

MR. AND MRS. G. H. KELLY BACK FROM THE WAR ZONE

The fact that he was a delegate to a peace celebration did not save George H. Kelly, former president of the Omaha Commercial club, from the inconveniences of war. He and Mrs. Kelly have reached home. As they fled from Paris three days before the actual declaration of war by Germany, they avoided most of the trouble later tourists experienced. They managed to save their baggage, and stayed quietly in London during most of August. Mr. Kelly was a delegate to the celebration of 100 years of peace between England and America.

TRAFFIC CLUB TAKING ON DEFINITE SHAPE

Omaha jobbers, manufacturers and wholesalers have taken the preliminary steps toward organizing a traffic club. At the first meeting at the Commercial club, J. P. Byrne was chosen temporary presiding officer. A committee on membership was appointed consisting of Mr. Williams of the Bemis Bag company, Mr. Newquist of Orchard & Wilhelm, Mr. Murray of the Commercial club traffic bureau, and Mr. Van Housen of the Lee-Glass-Andersen company.

JERPE PARTY TO ARRIVE IN OMAHA SATURDAY

The Jerpe party of Omahans caught in Europe by the war, who had their plans spoiled and were delayed in Germany and Sweden for some time, will reach here Saturday, according to messages from J. P. Jerpe. He wired from New York, and then telephoned from Chicago. He said the party had gone through quite a few hardships, and their return was sooner than expected. Those with him were his daughters, Mrs. Lewis Peterson and daughter, Miss Clara; Mrs. M. J. Melander and child, and Miss Lillian Rohlf.

PHILPOTT AND SOMMERS HAVE GOOD CHICKEN HUNT

Fred Philpott and Otto Sommers of the Union Pacific are home from a prairie chicken hunting trip into the valley of the North Platte. They went to the town of Gothenburg and from there made an automobile jaunt of forty miles north, where they found chickens galore. Without any difficulty they secured the limit of ten birds per day.

COMING OF THE COMMERCIAL TRAVELER AUGURS WELL

An encouraging indication of the business situation in the Omaha territory is the influx of traveling salesmen, who have reached the city in numbers, after a temporary lull in business at the outbreak of the European war. They declare that conditions here seem good and are better than in most cities they have already visited.

BOUNDARY LINE IS FIXED

The boundary line between Canada and Alaska has been finally defined. The surveying parties, American and Canadian, have reached the Arctic shore. The work has been going on steadily since 1906. It consisted in tracing the line of the 141st meridian, says the Indianapolis News. They had first to find the line to get a starting point. The Russians had not planted monuments along the line when the country was sold to us.

The surveying parties had telegraphic signals from Seattle and Vancouver flashed to them and so checked up the local time, and thus by comparison, fixed the parallel to a certainty. The problem then was to run a line directly north toward the geographical pole and not to be deceived by the magnetic pole. Customarily, exploring parties seek the easiest way. But here was no compromise, the line had to be absolutely straight. Even Mount St. Elias was climbed—14,600 feet—and it was done in two weeks, whereas the duke of the Abruzzi took six months for his expedition. The work almost throughout was done amid snow hills, on the ice and over glaciers. When the two parties reached the summit of St. Elias a five day snowstorm overtook them. At the close of a season every one of 20 pack horses was either dead or unfit for use.

The line was divided into sections, and each party worked independently. The stations were about fifteen miles apart, and every three miles or so monument were placed, larger at principal points and smaller at obscure places. The larger were of aluminum bronze five feet high, set in heavy bases of concrete. These monuments had often to be carried by the men themselves where the path was too much for the pack animals. The concrete base weighed 1,500 pounds, and the sand, water and cement for them had to be man packed up the steep mountain pathways to the sites. The sections divided between the two parties were counter checked each by the other from the field notes.

Fuel was scarce in the Arctic regions, but generally sufficient was found to help out the artificial fuel. The suffering and the narrow escapes are things that can be imagined. One man was lost by falling down a glacier to be dashed to pieces. Another became a physical and mental wreck from the hardships. But at last both parties stood on the Arctic shore and the stars and stripes and the British standard were unfurled side by side. Altogether it was one of the greatest works in surveying that has ever been done, a peculiar hardship of it being that the line must go exactly, no matter whether a lofty mountain, like St. Elias, or a ghastly ravine stood in the way. Many of the mountains, however, were avoided by triangulation and a system of cross observations, which established the points of the line topographically.

After the surveyor and the triangulator had finished their work of establishing the line the topographer had to map out the region. To do this the topographical party had to reach the high points in order to examine the neighboring land accurately, plot its contours and record with considerable nicety the physical peculiarities and the kind of trees growing there, so that should a monument disappear the site could be relocated and thus avoid the exhaustive work of the survey. So really the whole ground was gone over twice—New York Herald.
