THE AUCTION BLOCK, By Rex Beach, 841 Pp. $1.35. Harper & Bros. Lorelet Knight possessed an unusual amount of beauty and her shrewd mother soon saw in this loveliness a means of enriching the entire family. Lorelet must marry a wealthy man. But in the little town of Vall where they lived there were no wealthy men. So the family, which consisted of the father, an insignificant politician, the scheming mother, Jim. the only son, abuot as poor a specimen of humanity as ever gambled or lounged in a cafe, and Lorelei perself, all come to New York, where Lorelei's face and figure quickly win for her a position in the oborus of a Broadway "revue." Although many of her companions are women by no means above reproach, she berself has "built up a reputation that insures respect," even at such an affair as the party which Jarvis Hammon of the steel syndicate gave to a number of his colleagues, where Lorelel's path first crossed those of Bob Wharton, only son of Hannibal C. Wharton, "one of the dominant figures in the steel syndicate," and of Adoree Demorest, "advertised as the wickedest woman in Europe." She at last yields to an almost irresistible pressure and makes a bargain she knows to be wrong, but carries out her part of it bravely and honestly and so works out. not merely her own salvation, but that of another also, becoming fully worthy of the happiness which is hers upon the final page-as was to be expected.

THE COPY CAT AND OTHER STORIES. By Mary El Wilkins Freeman. 351 Pp. Harper & Bros.

background, as usual in the author's books, is that of small villages favorable to the development of decided individuality. Several of the characters reappear in the different stories which deal with the emotions of youth, gentle old age, and childhood. 'The Amethyst Comb' is a story of woman's vanity; 'Daniel and Little Dan't' of an old man's love which overcame his master fear, and "The Copy Cat" is a plain little girl who imitates her dainty companion.

THE HANDS OF ESAU. By Margaret Deland. Si Pp. 31. Harper & Bros. The story is concerned with an ambitious young man who is getting a good start in life as an architect. He is overflowing with vitality, and his gental temperament and personal attractiveness make friends for him wherever he goes. The world opens out before him invitfingly, and at the start the reader is made to feel that it is likely to be not so much a world that will have to be conquered as a world that will quickly surrender whatever he asks of it. His employer's daughter and he fall in love with each other and have plighted their troth before the girl's father bestirs himself to find out something about the young man's antecedents. It is discovered that his father, a man of similar charm with the same tendency to secretiveness, had ended a promising career by being sent to the penitentiary for embezzlement. And the son, when he, too, learns the story, conceals it, thereby dashing from the girl's heart the ideal she had made of him.

WILD HONEY. By Cynthia Stockley. 201 Pp. $1.35. G. P. Putnam & Sons. The Africa of sudden and intense passions, weird cruelties and bawildering tendernesses, has furnished the author with the spirit and the body of the eight short stories that fill this volume. The book takes its title from the first story, which tells how a young Englishwoman goes on a journalistic mission into Rhodesis, taking with her the secret determination to marry while she is there one of South Africa's millionaires and then go back to London to have her revenge upon those who had slighted her when fickle fortune had made it necessary for her to earn her own living. She happens to get lost upon the veldt, where she wanders for days, and when finally she is rescued she passes through other perils. The wild honey of the veldt that symbolizes Africa works a change over both mind and heart, and love comes to teach her what are the real values of life. It is the longest and the best story of the collection, although the one called "Progress" gives a good picture of the Foer farmer as he looked to English eyes before the Boer war.

CANADIAN NIGHTS. By Albert Hickman. 255 Pp. $1.30. The Century company. Seven rather longish short stories, all of them having their scenes laid in Cauada, comprise this volume. They are humorous stories, and give the effect in their manner of telling of physical vigor, high spirits and a bracing atmosphere. Several of them deal with the bracing effects of other causes than atmosphere. There are many genuinely funny situations in the stories, and some of the peoplo, notwithstanding their highly reprehensible actions, are humanly amusing enough to disturb anybody's gravity.

THE ROSE OF ROSES. By Mrs. Henry Backus. 355 Pp. $1.25. The Page com-pany.

A girl of unusual beauty, endowed with a singing voice of rare quality and possessor of that charm of person which men sometimes describe as magnetic-this is rad Questenberg, a young American arch-Fraulein Antoinette Kroger, whom Conitect, visiting abroad, first meets in Bremen, "Toni" has ambitions which lean towards a career in America, and Conrad offers a chance of a voyage if "Tonj" will agree to a "trial engage-Impulsively she accepts, and then the love game is on. The story adaeres to conventions under unconventional circumstances, and its unaffectedness makes it singuarly appealing.

THE SILVER KING. By Alfred Wilson Barrett. 33 pp. $1.25. W. W. Dillingham company.

Wilfred Denver is falsely accused of murder. Geoffrey Ware is killed by a thiof and the blame for the deed falls upon Denver, who leaves England and comes to America, where for four years he worked in the sliver mines of Nevada. A lucky strike of millions wins him the title of "The Silver King." His return to England; his subsequent vindication, together with the discovery of the real criminal, form the happy ending that redeems the tragic intensity of the

THE LEAGUE OF THE LEOPARD. By Harold Bindioss. 228 pp. $1.30. Fred-erick A. Stokes company.

The Leopards are a league of negro "magicians" who rule over a large section of the interior of West Africa. Their invignts is a tuft of leopard's fur. Their country is rich in gold; one river is yellow with nugget-pebbles. Their boast is that no white man ever left their coun-One man did.
