Friday, December 18, 1914.

ON'T you hate to see the old-fashioned Christmas cards go out? place of the traditional cards of Christmas greetings there has been growing, for several seasons past, a tendency for the personal card of greetings.

Indications are that this new fad is gaining in vogue and the cheery Little cards, with their hackneyed traditional Christmas phrases, must be relegated to the shelf. Hence this protest and these tears, on them all jolly and rosy, and bedecked with impossible folks and figures, but even so, there is a pretty sentiment back of it all.

There was something individual, too, in the old card, a certain amount of thought was necessary in their selection and we all had such fun hunting them-cards that had a touch of sympathy, a note of some kind that would touch the recipient's mood or occupation.

But the new-fangled personal greeting card destroys all of this, and the intimacy of greetings. It is a wholesale sort of greeting, so to speak,
