Clean Up Spirit is

Omaha has taken to the clean-up idea with unusual spirit, as evidenced by the activity of thousands of young and old people of the city during the last few days. The finishing touches of the work will be accomplished this week when forty-eight wagons of the city street cleaning department will cover eighteen districts and will haul away, without charge, the heaps which have been placed in convenient places by the householders.

The clean-up work is divided between the street and the health departments, the latter taking care of unsanitary accumulations which must be removed within a specified time.

The city officials do not want to use the word "must," in this connection, although there are instances when the law must be invoked. The officials want to, and they believe they are bringing the people of the city into a realization of the importance of a city beautiful and a city which is clean. It is pointed out that it requires only a little effort upon the part of each family to bring out this desired condition.

Yesterday the children of the city fell in with enthusiasm and they accomplished much—yards were raked of litter and rubbish and alleys were cleaned. The parkings along sidewalks were brushed up for the reception of Miss Spring, who has made her appearance.
