

BATTLE OF HORSE CREEK IS RECALLED

Searching for Graves of Dead Army Officers Killed by Sioux Long Ago.

STORY OF A FRONTIER EPISODE

By G. L. SHUMWAY.

SCOTT'S BLUFF, Neb., July 18.—George L. Wilcox, O. O. Ferbach and others are locating the long forgotten, neglected and obliterated graves of Captain William D. Fouts and his men, Philip G. Alden, Edw. McMahon and Richard Gregor, who lost their lives a half century ago in the battle of Horse Creek.

The work is undertaken under orders from Captain Roy B. Harper of the quartermaster's corps of Omaha, and the remains are to be sealed in lead caskets and removed to the Military cemetery at Cottonwood canyon, a little east of North Platte.

The graves now lie under a field of alfalfa about four miles west of the city of Scottsbluff, close by the old ruin of Fort Mitchell. This fort was first built by Bruce Hubbard of the American Fur company and was named Fort Fontenelle, for Lucien Fontenelle, the father of Logan Fontenelle.

It would be impossible to find these graves now were it not for the memory of old-timers, who thirty years ago, came into the valley riding the range, or looking for homesteads.

Last winter it was my privilege to look over some of the old records in the National Library, and through the kindness of George F. Hyde of Omaha, and D. W. Butler of Washington, I am in possession of some details of the battle of Horse Creek and the events that led up to it, that are not ordinarily found in histories.

Began with Friendly Indians.

During the winter of 1844-45 there were around Fort Laramie about 2,000 Indians, who professed to be friendly, and said that the war tribes had made it very dangerous for them to pursue their usual vocation of hunting and trapping. Under orders they were fed and sustained through the cold weather, but the officials at the fort had good reason to believe that there were a number that were carrying word to the war braves. Every movement of the soldiers seemed to be quickly transmitted, almost instantly, into the enemy's camp.

It was therefore deemed advisable to remove the friendlies from this central scene of hostilities, and consequently on June 11, 1864, a company of 28 soldiers under Captain Fouts, was commissioned to act as an escort for the friendlies, who, in the number of 1,600, including squaws and pappoosees, were inclined to go. They were to be taken to Julesburg, and part of them to Kearney.

Charles Elston had charge of a number that he was trying to develop into scouts for the United States. While trying to make them useful to the government, and while they appeared to be doing according to instruction, he had his misgivings, and frequently was led to believe they were better scouts for the Indians.

Captain Fouts proceeded carefully down the river on the south side, and lost a nervous finger should prove a trigger prematurely, most of the guns were loaded. There was nothing of a suspicious note occurring except occasional signal fires on the hills bordering the Rawhide and Sheep creeks, and occasionally a fire arrow loast itself in the dark vault of the sky.

Trouble Starts Over Women.

These words manifestations of an undercurrent of hostility seem naturally trying to the nerves of the families of Captain Fouts and Lieutenant Trigg, which accompanied the party, and especially so because Mrs. Subanks and daughter, and Miss Laura Roper, recently captured from the Indians, and whose six months in captivity had familiarized them somewhat with Indians signs and their meanings, expressed grave apprehension. On the night of June 13, they went into camp on Horse creek, the Indians on the west side and the soldiers on the east side of the creek. The Indians proceeded to give a dog fight, and the officers were unable to discover what was in the air.

Three hundred and eighty warriors went into council, and the outcome was a tremendous fury at certain of the white soldiers who had taken the women squaws into their tent and kept them there for hours.

On the morning of the 14th the advance guard started with the wagons at 5 o'clock, the intention being to cover the eighteen miles to Camp Shuman, where they would camp in the meadows adjacent and near by. The wagons were strung out for a mile or more, when rapid firing was heard in the rear. Captain Fouts' real for peace was the direct cause of his death. The delay incident to loading and distribution of ammunition gave the Indians an advantage. The captain had gone back across Horse creek to bury the Indians, and they had killed, stripped and mutilated him, and had fired three miles toward the river and were making warlike demonstrations, while the squaws and pappoosees were crossing the river, riding or swimming beside their swimming ponies.

Immunity Offered and Declined.

The rear guard had at first run toward the front, but the white men saw the Indians half way and together they charged after the Indians. When near at hand Charles Elston was sent forward to offer those who would accept it and come peacefully, immunity from punishment. They met his offer with a shriek of defiance and charged furiously.

The Indians numbered more than 500 warriors, and when at a distance of about 50 yards they commenced firing and it was answered in telling effect by the military. While those in front were checked by the fire of the Gallagher rifles, both flanks of the Indians advanced so as to have them in an encircled position. Over the hills from the west side of Horse creek poured dozens and hundreds of the red men and an orderly retreat was taken to the wagons, which in the meantime had been drawn up in a defensive circle and hastily constructed rifle pits made.

The Indians then ceased their firing and withdrew. Seeing that they were induced to press their attack while the soldiers were behind defenses, and wishing to keep them engaged and at hand until reinforcements came, the officers in charge took fifty of the best mounted men, and called out. When out about three miles they saw large forces of Indians coming around the hills on the west side of Horse creek with the evident intention of cutting them off.

Agira the military retired to their encampments.

Reinforcements Come Too Late.

About 3 o'clock Captain Shuman arrived with a force from Camp Shuman or Fort Mitchell, and thus reinforced another attack was made upon the Indians, but it was a little late. The squaws and pappoosees had all succeeded in crossing the river, and the warriors had followed.

The military could not follow, for it would be impractical, and perhaps impossible to cross the river at its high stage, in the face of a superior number of Indians. A messenger had been sent to Fort Laramie, and Colonel Moonlight, well known for his recent summary execution of three renegade Indians, had started from the fort with 20 mounted men, when he met another courier with the information that the Indians had crossed the river, whereupon he crossed at the fort and took up the pursuit.

This constitutes another story, and the finish of the battle of Horse creek; the dead being the four named in the beginning of this article, and four others were wounded. The dead were taken to Camp Shuman, the ruins of which are still distinguishable, about 800 feet south of the west end of the Platte river bridge, west of this city. And out southwest thereof about a quarter of a mile they were laid to rest, and there have rested for this half a century ending the middle of June. And now from their obliterated graves they will be removed to join their fellows, the other early guardians of the Great Overland Trail, in the cemetery set aside for their honor by the national government.

BRUNDAGE SHOWS TO BE HERE ALL THIS WEEK

The S. W. Brundage shows, declared to be a revelation in the carnival business, will exhibit in Omaha for one week, starting tomorrow. The Brundage shows are considered among the largest on the road this season and comprise every attraction which goes to make up a first class company. The management guarantees that there is not a single attraction which is in the least offensive. It is announced that the management will not tolerate anything of "comfit" or will allow any other repulsive features.

Among the shows which are on tour with the Brundage company is Leon Marshall's "Famous Happy Days in Dixieland." This is a musical attraction of renowned reputation and comes to Omaha for the first time.

Thirty-five high-class minstrel performers make up the card. Each performer is recognized as being a leader in the minstrel profession and the attraction is high class and complete in every respect. A concert band of twenty pieces is carried with this one show.

Another of the excellent attractions which Mr. Brundage offers this season is the auto-drome in which several young women drivers risk their lives in racing at express train speed around a racing course at 40 miles per hour.

The "Miracle" representing an electric illusion performance which is surpassed by none, and many others will be offered by Mr. Brundage.

DANCING AT KRUG PARK IS PROVING MOST POPULAR

Krug park is attracting general attention. Large crowds are enjoying the cool breezes the picturesque place affords. A large picnic grove covered with fresh grass and shaded with pretty trees take the opportunity to take an outdoor lunch and frolic in the fresh air without the usual results of the most unpleasant things of the city. Added to the natural attractiveness of the park, the management has installed every conceivable contrivance to entertain the amusement seeker.

The giant coaster, the largest in the state, is the most popular. Free motion pictures in another amusement and an open air theater is well populated. Dancing in the open air pavilion is the most popular recreation, with the smooth floor and fine music improving the fun for the large numbers.

Farrar Will Sing "One Fine Day" Just to Please Folks of Omaha

Last Tuesday Louis Nash, member of the Associated Retailers committee in charge of the Charity Concert Course, received a letter from F. H. Ellis, manager for Miss Geraldine Farrar, who sings at the Omaha Auditorium, November 21, as one of the big attractions in the Charity Concert Course.

The letter was the result of a petition to Mr. Ellis from thirty-seven prominent society and musical folks that Miss Farrar include in her Omaha program "One Fine Day," the famous aria from Madam Butterfly.

That such a demand was a ticklish proposition few people realize. The diva has very decided notions of her own in program-making and one of the clauses in her contract with Mr. Ellis is that neither the local concert manager nor Mr. Ellis himself shall attempt to dictate what numbers shall be given on any Farrar concert program. Wherever "Madam Butterfly" or Miss Farrar is mentioned one always suggests the other. So, this little crowd listening one evening to Miss Farrar on the Victorrol called up the management of the Charity Concert

Course and said they would take thirty-seven course tickets if influence could be brought to bear on Miss Farrar to sing this beautiful aria in person here this winter.

Asking Miss Farrar to sing "One Fine Day" is almost like asking DeWolf Hopper to recite "Cassidy at the Bar" or Patti to sing "Home Sweet Home," which are favorites that the public clamors for, and almost demands. The artists themselves are always hoping against hope that this time the public will forget. But the Omaha public did not forget this time, and Miss Farrar will very generously sing in her inimitable way this wonderfully appealing aria.

Paige Will Need Its New Factory

The enlargement of the factory of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company, announced some time ago as a step necessary to meet the increased demand, is now well under way, construction having been started on the big addition which will double the capacity of the plant. The building is being rushed to completion as fast as possible.

It is already apparent that this step was absolutely imperative, as the prospects for the new season just opening are such that the Paige company believes its resources will be strained to the utmost.

Two announcements for 1916 were recently made: The launching of the new Paige five-passenger light six ("Six 36") and the issue of a new edition of the Big Six ("Six 48"), the seven-passenger model.

Grant Sixes to Have The New 1916 Motors

The Grant Sixes that are being shipped to Omaha are being equipped with the new 1916 motors with a roller type of valve lifts instead of the mushroom type used heretofore. This valve lifter is materially increased in size, has at least 90 per cent more wearing surface, is quiet in every respect, does not permit the oil to seep by, and is easily removed from the motor without disassembling the front gear case, or removing the cam shaft.
