NEW PRINCIPAL IS WRITER OF STORIES

Karl Adams Has Hard Time Having His Writings Accepted Until He Puts Up a Job.

WILL BE HERE NEXT WEEK

Karl Adams, who will be here next week from Springfield, Mass., to be principal of the High School of Commerce, a few years ago had ambitions to be a short story writer. He submitted many manuscripts to many publishers and invariably his stories would be returned with the usual printed alips, bearing the consoling explanation, "We regret we are not able to use your story at this time. This does no imply that there is not merit in your work. We thank you for giving us an opportunity to review your manuscript."

Mr. Adams did not despair. About three years ago a baby arrived at his home. That was his inspiration for renewed efforts. The advent of the youngster opened up new avenues of thought. He received new impressions. He gained a broader viewpoint and found his baby one of the most interesting and inspiring sources of his life. He had traveled much in Europe, but that travel did not yield the will be the speakers of the svening season at the N. Paxton and W. S. "I will need this information in my commercial geography and it will be valuable even if I should not return to Omaha," remarked Mr. Adams, as he was returning to the east.

The value of time is one of Mr. Adam's strong characteristics. He regards every hour as a potentialty and finds interest in many of the commonplace affairs of
