THE EX-WILD MAN'S STORY

"Me remember big storm. Me lashed to mast. Me second mate on ship Helen Brimstone." At the mention of the name of the ship the Captain, Red Dog Pinney and Mike Swansen looked at each other and gasped. They remembered that the Helen Brimstone was a pirate sailing off the Spanish coast in the early seventies. The last heard of her was when she took $7,000,000,000.14, mostly in pieces of eight, from the Norwegian treasure ship Mary Field. The Helen Brimstone was, perhaps, the most famous of all the pirates which ever sailed the high or low seas. The ex-Wild Man continued. "All alone me wake up on beach lashed to piece of mast. Me here long time alone. Then me meet black friend." Here the ex-Wild Man stopped short, put his hand to his forehead, got up and started running around the edge of the lake until he came to a flat rock directly opposite the mouth of the tunnel. Here he started digging the gravel away like a dog preparing a storage place for a choice bone copped from the butcher when his back was turned. He yelled for Mike, the Captain and Red Dog to come to him. When they did he bade them help him dig. They fell to with a will and made the gravel fly. They had no idea what it was all about until—
