Us Boys--At Last the Bunch is Safely Out of the Submarine Boat

Drawn by Tom McNamara

Thrilling Stuff on the Briny Deep

Our friends are transferred from the submarine to a neutral tramp steamer carrying a cargo of match handles. You can see just how the transfer was accomplished. Notice the smoothness of the sea and all that. But just to make it a little difficult, let us state that the ocean at this spot is seven hundred and three fathoms deep. However, there were no accidents worth recording. The transfer was made for a darn good reason. See that smoke just over the horizon? That is coming from a ship which the submarine has a date with. She is all out of torpedoes and is going to use her small guns, running a chance of being rammed. If she's rammed, good night. Her commander, being a pretty nice fellow and not wanting our young friends to get wet, when he sighted the tramp took a few minutes off and got rid of them. Just for that we wish him luck.
