BALL PLAYERS' ODD BELIEFS looked like new, but it was my old hat

Fear of the Jinx Runs Strong Among the Stars of the Diamond.

PECULIARITIES OF SUPERSTITION

Everyone of us fears something or other. The beneecked man fears his wife, the spendthrift is in mortal dread of an empty pocketbook and the base ball player fears the Jinx. And the fear of the Jinx accounts for the peculiar ac-of the Jinx accounts for the peculiar acother. The benpecked man fears his of an empty pocketbook and the base ball player fears the Jinx. And the fear tions the ball player will go through in order to offset it, from scratching his left ear to putting his right hind foot in his left-hand broeches picket in order to get a hit. When one considers the peculiar kinks of base ball it isn't difficult to see why ball players should be prone to entertaining superstitions. For instance, a man lopes out there one day, pulls his cap over his left eye, steps up to the plate and gets a hit. Say that, during that game, he keeps his cap in the same position and gets three hits. The next day he comes out and can't buy a hit. He wonders what's the matter with him. He remembers that on the previous day he had his cap pulled over his left eye. He wonders if that had anything to do with it. Of sourse, he knows it hadn't; but just the same, when he next advances to plate he pulls the cap over his left eye "for luck"-as he expresses it.

Now we'll say, that this time, third or fourth trip to the plate he gets a hit. If he reasons it out he knows that the hit and the cap over his left eye were merely coincidences, but somewhere in his head the idea takes shape that the cap pulled over his left eye is lucky. And thereafter when he gets up to bat the cap is always in that posttion. There you have the formation of what to an outsider seems like a foolish superstition.

All Players Have Streak

All ball players have some supersti-tion or other. In this spasm, the last convulsion of my exparing series, I shall tell of some that came under my notice. George Smith, formerly of Cincinnati and Brooklyn, had an out-and-out superstition. He carried a rabbit's foot somewhere in the pockets of his uniform and a four-leaf clover in a little mack pinned to the top of his stocking. If he couldn't get a hit he'd work the rabbit's foot for all it was worth. I don't know if it ever got him anything, but he certainly believes in it. It would have been easier to convince the public that an umpire is a human being than to have talked Smith out of his mascot hobby.

Knabe, the present manager of the Baltimore Federal league team, had a pecultar superstition, which, I suppose, he still shines up and uses upon occasions. His dope was never to walk in front of the umpire and opposing catcher when on his way to the plate. He always made a complete circle around them. He probably knew that was the only way a player could ever get around an umpire, so he took advantage of it. Anyway, this circumnavigation took place overy time Knabe advanced to the plate. John Riley, the old first baseman of the Cincinnati club, used to get his hits by means of the holes in his belt. I don't mean to say that he lassoed the hits with these holes, or that it was by means of them that he got the pitcher he believed these belt holes had something to do with his hitting powers. Accordingly, as his batting became good or had, he shifted his belt buckle.

British Government Suppose he went out today with his bolt fastened at the first hole and got To Maintain Rate of three hits. In that case he left it there. If he didn't get a hit at all he'd move Exchange with U.S.

5-D

I had missed that bat, and I determined to make Bug pay for it. I got a saw, therefore, and made firewood of his twenty-odd bats. When Holliday saw what a deed had been done, he wept over his desocrated holics; then he roared like a buil of Bashan; then he raved and threatened my life; then he went out and bought sume new bats. I never tried to touch the new ones, for I believed if I

however, is not peculiar to base ball 1 believe it to be one shared in by all peoples of all times. You remember when Connie Mack's Athletics last played the Gianta? You probably saw then the little hunchback that traveled with Mack's toam. Well, last year, at the world's series games, Mack had this little fellow along with him. I can remember him capering around in front of the Athietica' bench, and, to tell the truth, it was a thing I didn't like to see. When the games were going against the MacSwatters, each of them, on his way to the plate, would rub the bulge on the midget's back-for luck? At one time the whole team arose and rubbed the little fellow's back, and this maneuver resulted in a regular swattest. But, nevertheless, the Boston team came from behind and forged ahead. You should have heard the rlot! The Boston team began to yell, "Rub his back! Rub his back!" and the Athletics did so, but no use. All the good luck in the midget had been used up. The game was lost. And now, indies and gentlemen, I have done. I didn't think I could get away with it, but I have. And this misglving about one's abilities reminds me of on more yarn.

Years ago a big fellow named Tom Estabrook played first for the Metropolitans, and later for the New York Glants. Tom was a good fellow, but very pecu-liar. When he had played a hard same and was all covered with dust and sweat he'd streak for the club house, and, without washing or even taking off his uniform, he would put on his street clothes and go home.

"Honest John" Kelly was his manager at that time, and for some reason Kelly was sore on Estabrook. He crabbed at him all day; he rode him to death. This made Tom more peculiar than ever. After a peculiarly hard crabbing Tom would retire to the dressing room, stand in front of the mirror and then make passes at himself. He probably thought he was beating up Kelly. He used to work himself into a fury and belt the air with all his might. All the time he kept scowling at his own image in the mirror and talking to himself. "Tom Estabrook," he would say, "why stand you all this abuse? You're a good man, Thomas Estabrook. Why do you do it? Are you afraid of this Kelly person? No! You've got a good kick, why don't you plug him?"

Finally he kidded himself into believing that he could lick Kelly, and one day he hit him. How do you do? Bupp!

They picked Kelly up when Tom had finished with him and took him home in a pillow case. Tom was all there, but he had never been quite sure of it.

So there you are. The sesson is over, my friends. I'll put my stick in the oat bag, lock up my uniform and crawl into into a hole. What I do mean is, that a tree for the winter. Spring practice will be held at Marlin-next year .- New York World, the buckle up to the second hole. If that didn't kill the jink he'd move it up to the third. There, of course, he'd have to stop, for there were only three holes (Correspondence of the Associated Press.) in the belt. If he hit well with the buckle at the third hole he'd leave it there. If Association of Chambers of Commerce he did not he'd shift it back to No. 1 has passed the following resolution on again and begin the process all over the subject of the American rate of exonce more. It was quite a sight to see John miss three good ones, growl like lor of the exchequer: a buildog out of the side of his mouth, and then hitch his belt up to the next hole. He was laughed at, of course, flotation of the issue in the United States but he believed what he believed.

Batty on Bats.

Batty on Bats. Old "Bug" Holliday's superstition was of the treasury should take steps well in bats. He kept about twenty-seven of them advance, and without delay, for conin his locker, and if another player so sidering means by which difficulty may much as laid his hand on them Bug be met. yelled murder, When I wanted to have some fun with Holiiday I'd pretend to plek up one if his numerous bats on my way to the plate. The minute I got near Bug would be up on his toes. If I touched one, as I often did, he'd grab it away from me, and say some things not in the book of rules. And if he failed to get a hit with that bat during that gamewowl-he'd ride me for a week. I was presented with a wagon tongue bat one time that just suited my genius. It was heavy, of a good length and strong enough to knock out fungoes with cannon balls. One day this bat disappeared. I suspected where it went, but I abided my time. Finally, after a certain game, when the players had left the club house, I broke open Holliday's looker. There was the bat, sure enough. It had been smoothed off and sandpapered until it
