HOLDS MEN BACK

It appears to be the opinion of military nen here that when Villa is found and pushed on both sides he will not stand and fight. This belief is based upon the experiences of the American troops in the surprise attack Thursday and the subsequent pursuit of the bandits by Major Tompkins, who described their flight as practically a rout.

Although Villa's strength in the battle here was estimated at from 1,500 to 2,500 men, Captain Rudolph Smpeer and Captain George Williams, who participated in the pursuit, described his retreat as said, too, that his place probably would although when they discovered the tion meager force of fifty-nine with which mother, who had three little children, to go to the hospital.
