Buy It and Leave It Campaign for the Belgian Relief

The "Buy It and Leave It Campaign" in Omaha for Belgian relief is to be an April 23 and 24. The campaign is authorized by the Commission for the Relief of Belgium, in New York, and in Omaha the campaign will manifest itself by the offer of articles of reasonable value in the retail stores, where those wishing to help may buy out of the fund of clothing articles and leave them with the donation that they be delivered to the relief commission at New York. From there they are to be sent in large lots to Belgium, where they are distributed under the direction of the American committee looking after the relief of the Belgians.

REAL SON OF KING BURIED AT OMAHA

Romance of Life and Death of James Ord, Who Was Descendant of England's King.

UNITED STATES ARMY OFFICER

Last Saturday, April 16, a hearse might have been seen proceeding from Holy Sepulchre cemetery, West Leavenworth street, to the Union station.

The hearse bore a casket in which was the body of a son of King George IV of England. The grave diggers in Holy Sepulchre cemetery had just disinterred it and it was about to be sent to the Arlington National cemetery near Washington, D. C.

Probably not half a dozen persons in Omaha knew that the body of the son of a great king was buried here for forty-three years, a first cousin of the late Queen Victoria.

This man was not a prince, though he was a son of a king. He was born in 1796. His grandfather was George III, who prosecuted the war against the American colonies that resulted in the independence of the United States.

George IV married Mrs. Fitzherbert in 1786, when he was a boy of 23, and the man who afterward became a resident of Omaha and died here in 1873 was the issue of this marriage.

Grandson's Will Carried Out. He was known as James Ord. A number of his descendants are now living in the United States. One of his sons was General E. O. C. Ord, United States army.

The removal of his body to Arlington cemetery was made in accordance with the will of his grandson, James P. Ord, who died recently in Albany, N. Y., leaving a large estate. That part of his will relating to removal of the body from Omaha to Arlington reads as follows: "Article Five—I request my executors to erect in the National cemetery at Arlington, in which are the remains of my uncle, Major General Edward Otho Cresset Ord, and his son, Lieutenant Jules Garesche Ord, a sensible monument in their memory and, if possible, to place in the same lot the remains of my grandfather, now buried at Omaha, Nebraska (who, after leaving Georgetown college, became a midshipman in the United States navy and afterward a lieutenant in the United States army), and to place upon such monument an inscription in memory of them all and to make such provision as my executors, with the permission of the proper officers in charge of the said cemetery, may secure and deem best for the inscription to be placed upon such monument in memory of any other male descendants, but by the male line only, of my said grandfather, who, having served in the United States army or navy, may be entitled to be buried in a United States government cemetery and for the purpose expressed in this article I empower and request my executors to expend such sum as they may deem sufficient, not to exceed fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000)."

The will is dated November 7, 1912.

Wish is Carried Out. The matter was taken up by the executors and negotiations made with the Holy Sepulchre Cemetery association here for the removal of the body. The request of the living descendants of James Ord had to be secured before removal of the body was permitted.

The New York firm having charge of the estate of James P. Ord corroborates the statement of his birth. He was brought to this country when a small boy as the nephew of James Ord, an Englishman, and eventually entered the army and navy of his grandfather's former enemies, the United States of America—which is in itself an odd trick of fate, was fester.

The reason for his coming to America is not hard to conjecture in reading the life of George IV.

Story of a King's Loves. Smitten with a boyish love affair, the young prince married Mrs. Fitzherbert December 31, 1793. Less than two years later, to obtain parliamentary assistance for his debts, he allowed Fox to deny the marriage in Parliament.

In 1796 the violent-tempered, profligate and extravagant young prince married his cousin, Caroline Amelia Elizabeth, of Brunswick, in order to liquidate his debts. He deliberately left her a year after their marriage, and his conduct toward her, his attempts to procure divorce, his numerous mistresses and general behavior made him extremely unpopular, notwithstanding his cleverness, versatility and gracious manner, which among a certain class of associates earned him the title of "the first gentleman of Europe." He became king in 1820 and died in 1830.

Thus, the Omaha man was a first cousin of the late Queen Victoria, she being a daughter of the duke of Kent, who was a brother of George IV.

And he was a second cousin of the present king of England.

James Ord died in Omaha in 1873 (while his cousin was queen of England). He was buried in the old St. Mary's cemetery on Leavenworth street, and his body was removed to Holy Sepulchre cemetery when St. Mary's was closed.
