Have We Triumphed in Scarlet Fever

By WOODS HUTCHINSON, M. D.

The early symptoms of scarlet fever are also the early symptoms of that commonest of all the little fevers, a bad cold or a sore throat. This, however, is no drawback, for from a practical point of view, it makes little or no difference what fever your child is coming down with, so long as you recognize promptly that an infection is coming and act accordingly. "Isolate in haste and make your diagnosis at leisure," is the rule of safety.

The moment the little one shows any two or three of these general danger signals of infection, or "colds" he should be put to rest at once, in a comfortable bed, flat, firm, elastic and with plenty of room in it for him to tumble about and roll over, in a quiet, well-ventilated room, given a mild laxative, a hot bath and all the pure water, lemonade or other fruit juice drinks that he craves. Then if he doesn't quickly improve, call in the doctor and let him decide what particular fever he has and give the appropriate treatment.

Children showing any of these danger signals should no more be sent to school, or to any entertainment, or public resort, than they should be sent out bare-headed in a snow storm or bare-foot in the sleet or slush. They will get nothing but harm from any sort of work which they attempt to do when in this condition and be a source of nothing but danger to the classmates and playmates.

If the little fever proves to be scarlet fever, the headache becomes much more severe, the fever goes up very rapidly, often reaching 104 degrees in twenty-four hours, the throat becomes very sore and swallowing so painful that it is sometimes hard to tell, at this stage, whether we are dealing with diphtheria or scarlet fever.

On the second or third day a bright, speckled, crimson or scarlet rash appears, which has given its name to the disease, first upon the neck and upper part of the chest. From this it spreads rapidly all over the body until the little sufferer is literally as red as a boiled lobster from foot to toe.

Fortunately the worst is soon reached and passed, and by the third to the fifth day the fever reaches its height and begins to decline, so that usually within a week or ten days at the outside the active part of the fever is over. The throat becomes more comfortable, the rash fades and the child begins to take some interest in his surroundings and gets back his appetite.

The risk of one of the most serious after-effects of scarlet fever in childhood is nephritis, or acute inflammation of the kidneys. About the fourth or fifth day the examinations show traces of albumin in the urine and this persists for several weeks, but usually with proper care clears up completely and leaves no trace of permanent trouble in the kidneys.

If, however, the proper precautions as to diet and treatment, to insure a free flow of urine, are not taken, or still more if the patient is allowed to get up too soon or go out and expose himself to the weather or go back to school before the albumin has entirely disappeared from his urine, then the inflammation may take on a serious form at once. The urine will be suppressed, severe headache followed by drowsy will set in and the little patient will be thrown into a very alarming and dangerous condition. Fortunately, even when this complication occurs, proper attention and care will usually clear up the kidney trouble and recovery will result.

But we are finding out our dismay in recent years that this is by no means the last of the danger, but that the men and women who develop Bright's disease in middle or later life are often the very ones who suffered from an attack of inflammation of the kidneys after scarlet fever in childhood.

The other complication which needs to be guarded against in scarlet fever comes later still, and that is inflammation of the middle ear, with rupture of the drum and suppuration or discharge from the ear. This danger may be best prevented by careful attention to the throat and nose in the earlier stages of the disease by antiseptic washes, sprays, etc., also by watching the child carefully to see whether it shows any signs of earache, either by crying or putting its hand up to its ear, or burying that side of the head in the pillow.

Even after the inflammation has reached the ear promptly puncture of the drum, to let out the pus, followed by skilful antiseptic treatment, will both greatly diminish the suffering of the little one and make the recovery more rapid and complete. There is no danger of a permanent hole in the drum and chronic discharge from the ear after early puncture, as the drum heals up very readily in children. Indeed, our chief difficulty is to keep it open long enough to drain all the pus and germs completely out of the drum cavity.

Strange as it may seem in such exceedingly common and familiar diseases, we have until just recently been utterly baffled in our attempts to discover the germs that cause either measles, scarlet fever or whooping cough. Hence we had no vaccines or antitoxins against them.

But patience and hard work were rewarded finally, and about a year ago a vaccine of whooping cough was discovered by a French bacteriologist and its vaccine is giving encouraging results already. While just within the past week Walter, of Harvard, has reported the discovery of the germ of scarlet fever. It is already working enthusiastically on both a vaccine to prevent and an antitoxin to cure the disease, and his high reputation renders his cheering announcement all the more hopeful.

In-Shoots

The wife who laughs at hubby's looks is usually considered silly by her neighbors.

Scratching of the neck can not usually locate a tick in its own corner.

When they are thoroughly on the loose, dogs prowl, chickens loiter and mice meander in it and fall on their backs.

When opportunity comes along in the form of a nice young girl the chances are that some other fellow has been watching her.

AND smiling! As though there was no inconsolable grief overwhelming her heart because she has strayed into that very mysterious land of the cruel Lilliputians and fallen before their swarmed attack. —NELL BRINKLEY.

How to Win a Girl

By DOROTHY DIX.

Son, do you want to know how to make a hit with the fair sex? Listen, and I will whisper the secret to you and tell you the one particular bit of flattery that no woman, from Mother Eve down, has ever been able to resist.

You think you know it. When you tell a woman you love her that her eyes are like sapphires or violets drenched in dew. You speak of her hair that is like spun gold or the black clouds at midnight. You praise her swan-like neck or her peaches-and-cream complexion or wonder why she doesn't have her hand modeled in marble or you liken her figure to a willow wand in an April breeze.

And having bored this inebriate to a maiden's pulchritude you mentally pat yourself on the back as a hot-air artist that understands his business. Of course, no woman really hates to have her looks praised and she's not likely to interrupt you so long as your conversation is devoted to extolling her as a living picture, but that isn't the sort of talk that really gets her.

Women expect a man to flatter them about their looks. Every man on earth tells every woman on earth that she desires to please what a prize beauty she is. It's simply the usual stuff and when a woman hears it it doesn't cause a single thrill of gratified vanity, because if she's good-looking she knows it already, and if she is homely she resents the man thinking she's fool enough to be deceived. Anyway, she knows that every man who has been brought up with manners of a gentleman feels it just as incumbent on him to compliment a woman on her looks as it is to say good morning to her.

Furthermore, the thing that a woman is proud of possessing is not a body, but a mind and a soul. Therefore, son, if you want to pay a woman the ultimate compliment, the one before which she will sit down like a stone before the statue, don't tell her that she is Venus, but Minerva. Don't waste any time extolling over her peony teeth, but hang on the words of wisdom that flow from her lips. Discourse about what she thinks and not about how she looks and you can baptize whom you please.

It has ever been thus. When the wise sage said to King Hiram, "I have no interest in telling her of her physical charms and promising to make her even more beautiful if she would try an eye-dropper. Ask me, if I offered a brand of flattery for more public and interesting. It assumed at once that she had a deep and profound intellect, and the breathless temptation it offered her was to engage the higher reason of knowledge with it.

The flattery to her mind was what Eve felt for, and every daughter of Eve still follows her mother's example. It is a matter of common observation that cheerless and doctors are usually worshipped by women. The reason for this is simply that physicians and doctors are generally the only men that ever recognized that women have minds and souls, and who ever talk to women about their looks unless what they really think and feel about the problems of life and the world we live in.

The average man simply wants to know whether a woman loves him or not and whether she has got enough sense and wisdom to know what he's saying about or not a flattery that is merely a matter of common observation that cheerless and doctors are usually worshipped by women.

millinery question he treats her as if she was a mindless being.

Then comes along sometimes the preacher, who explores the realm of the soul with her, or the doctor, who must understand the psychology of the woman to treat her properly, especially if she's inclined to be neurotic, or the long-haired poet or philosopher, who talks the inner meaning of things with her, and we have another case of soul mates and affinities.

It's the first time the poor woman has ever had a man talk to her as if she was an intelligent human being and the flattery has gone to her head like strong drink and made her do foolish things.

Any woman will tell you that there is no other compliment in the world that she values so highly as for a man to treat her as if she was another man, to discuss with her questions of general interest, thereby implying that he thinks that she is just as capable of understanding what she reads and hears as he is and of forming as lucid an opinion. And when a man actually asks a woman for her view on a matter of real importance or seeks her advice she is ready to burst with pride and vainglory.

Believe me, son, the most potent jolly in the world with a woman is just to make her feel that she has not a perfectly marvelous mind, full of strange, fascinating treasure houses, whose doors you unlock with trembling wonder as to what they may contain.

Just make a woman feel that you can never tire of listening to her conversation and you've got all the other duns who told her that she was a ten-thousand-dollar beauty left at the post.

And when you marry, son, if you want a wife who will be a helpmate and an economist, who will scrape the very potato parings to save, just talk to your wife about your business and consult her about your investments and let her feel that you think she is a sort of feminine wizard of finance. The wife who is fed on that kind of flattery at home is so elated that no matter what sort of a husband she's really got she believes he's the matrimonial prize of the universe.
