Heavens in May

By WILLIAM F. RIGGE.

The days increase in length by nearly an hour during the month, being 13 hours, 49 minutes long on the 1st, 14 hours, 22 minutes on the 15th and 14 hours, 30 minutes on the 31st.

Venus dominates the whole western sky during the early hours of the night. It reaches its greatest brilliancy on the 27th, being then about forty times as bright as a standard star of the first magnitude.

Fashion Fads

THE Lover understands the twist the world had to the Lady of Shalot—who never saw it as it lay outside her high tower window—but its reflection in the mirror that faced the window; a swimming, high-colored world, glimmering, mysterious, turned about backward, strangely terrifying and luring in its queer sheeny beauty.

She creeps into them all and lies there looking out at him. The flare of the sunrise in Her blown-back gold hair and Her face in the sun at the core. The lake cradles Her face on its sparkling allied. Every child he passes startles him with a line of cheek or chin or a turn of lip that is for a breathless instant subtly Hers.

holds Her against the sky and down to the sea-foam—and the tiny blue flower that he must stoop down to a rock shelter to see is exactly the blue of Her eyes and moves like Her as it nods, a minute dancer, in the wind.

The Lessons of Matrimony

By DOROTHY DIX.

"The sight of a jarring, bickering, middle-aged husband and wife is always a shocking one to me," said the woman philosopher, "not only because it is the outward and visible sign of a marriage that has been a failure, but because it shows that either the husband or wife, or both of them, have been too stupid to learn the lessons of matrimony."

that filled my early married life with heartaches and tears. "I have learned, for instance, that it is never safe for a wife to originate an idea that doesn't strictly concern her clothes or the cooking. That is, she must never put forward her plans as her own. And, above all, if they turn out well she must never claim them."

a woman learns that it is as hard as shutting her teeth on her opinions concerning a matter in which she is vitally interested and not proffering a few suggestions in the matter. But if boys, for in the end her husband, who would have scorned her advice, will condescend to talk the subject over with her and then she can administer her advice in sugar-coated pills that he will swallow without knowing what he is taking."

Good Words for Dandelions

The humble dandelion, whose flowers called "God's Gold" has delighted the children of all nations, is coming into real prominence in foodstuffs, back seat. It is taking on a real aristocratic air, too, for it is now being grown under glass and at the beginning of the season sold for 30 cents a quart. Now that the household dandelion is being crowded by the common every-day plants that are gathered in meadows and orchards, it costs but 10 cents a quart. You can distinguish it from the field dandelion by its longer, broader leaves and its lighter color.

Green grown dandelions are most delicate and may be used in salads, cut up and mixed with cream or butter. The field grown dandelion is rather tough to be used in that way. Both kinds are much a splendid vegetable to use in spring that it is a pity more families do not use them. Things that are common do not have value in some eyes and because we have known dandelions all our lives we are apt to despise them.
