PETERS WINS IN STRAIGHT FALLS

Papillion Grappler Springs Surprise by Using Gotch Toe Hold to Throw Demetral.

GETS SECOND WITH SCISSORS

Charley Peters, the Papillion wrestler, who is popularly supposed to share patent rights on the celebrated Nebraska scissors hold with Joe Stecher, sprung a new one in his match with William Demetral at the Auditorium Wednesday.

Charley dropped the scissors for the moment and stole some of Mr. Gotch's copyrighted stuff. To be explicit, Charley applied the famous Gotch toe hold in winning a fall from the Greek.

Peters won the match in straight falls. He returned victor in the first tilt in twenty-one minutes, touching Demetral's shoulders to the canvas by the toe hold pressure. He won the second fall in twenty-three minutes, using the scissors this time.

It took Peters a total of forty-four minutes to earn both falls. It took Gotch fifty-nine minutes to turn the same trick last February out on the coast.

Toe Hold Is Surprise.

The application of the toe hold by the Papillion grappler proved a distinct surprise to the ring bugs assembled last night. Heretofore Peters has always dumped his opponents by the scissors process.

But in the first round of grappling last night Charley tried for the scissors but once and that was a half-hearted attempt which failed before it was started. The rest of the time Charley worked on other holds.

It was a case of about fifty-fifty during the first round for fifteen minutes. Both men were more or less cautious and made no attempts to secure a fall which would have left them open to attack. Demetral showed quite a bit of speed and skill and apparently had Peters worried.

But after the first quarter of an hour Peters began to work out on the Greek and his superiority gradually became manifest.

Pressure Is Too Much.

At the twenty-minute mark Peters dived for the toe-hold and got it. Slowly he began to force Demetral's leg up and under the Greek's body. That the toe-hold was going to be successful was evident by the expression of pain in Demetral's face. A minute of the pressure sufficed and the Greek's shoulders were clamped tight to the canvas.

The second tilt was a whirl-wind affair. Demetral went after Peters hot and heavy and Charley was just as eager to mix it. Considerable rough-and-tumble work served to bring applause from the fans.

Has Close Escape.

Peters was in a bad way once or twice in the second fracas and only masterful defensive work enabled him to break loose. Demetral had Charley's shoulders within an inch or so of the mat with a scissors and arm hold once, but the Papillion lad managed to break away in the nick of time.

After twenty minutes of fast and furious grappling Peters obtained his second toe hold on Demetral. It looked like he would get this fall also by the Gotch method. But the big Greek made one last final effort and snapped the lock. Quick as a flash Peters leaped on the Greek, linked his legs around Demetral's body
