Germany Can Not Use America to Coerce England

The receipt of the German reply to President Wilson's demand that Germany "immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels" has aroused a storm of diverse opinion in this country.

In THE LITERARY DIGEST for May 13, 1916, there is a complete presentation of American newspaper opinion of every shade upon this very important document, and it ranges all the way from the New York Herald's statements that the answer is "insulting" and "dishonest."

Scores of representative papers, however, repudiate the idea that Germany should bargain with the American Government over the destruction of American lives.
